VOLUME XLVIII, PART IX.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

SIXTY-SECOND CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 21, 1912.

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, let Thy Kingdom come in our hearts that we may be filled with wisdom and purity, justice and mercy, patience, courage, fortitude; that we may hallow Thy name and fulfill the law of Christ, "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you do ye even so to them." This we ask in the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CONFERENCE REPORTS, PENSION BILLS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference reports that have been printed under the rules. The first one I desire to call up is the bill H. R. 18712.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 18712. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 904).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18712) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3 and 4.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

WILLIAM RICHARDSON,
IRA W. WOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. J. MCCUMBER,
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

Amendment No. 1, Frank A. Schaller (H. R. 11007): The House passed this at $24. The Senate reduced the amount to $12 on the ground that the soldier's disability does not warrant a higher rating; and the House concurs and recedes from its disagreement to the amendment.

Amendment No. 2, Noah H. Stout (H. R. 11710): The House passed this at $24 per month. The Senate reduced the amount to $12 per month on the grounds that the soldier's physical condition does not warrant a higher rating; and the House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 3, Louis T. Moseley (H. R. 12721): The House passed this at $20. The Senate reduced the amount to $12 per month on the grounds that soldier's disability from pensionable causes does not warrant a higher rating. The soldier was rated $24 by the examining board for nephritis; and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 4, John H. Dardis (H. R. 15732): The House passed this at $15 per month. The Senate struck the item from the bill on the grounds that the soldier's condition is not due to his service. He is badly crippled; and the Senate recedes.

WILLIAM RICHARDSON.
IRA W. WOOD.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 20628.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 20628. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 905).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20628) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

HENRY E. BURNHAM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

Amendment No. 1, Oliver P. Allen (H. R. 16228): This is the case of a Mexican War veteran. The House passed the bill at $30 per month. The Senate struck the item from the bill on the grounds that the soldier can get the same rate by applying at the bureau, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 2, Anne Flannigan (H. R. 17723): This is merely the customary proviso, that in case of death of helpless child the additional pension shall cease. The House recedes from its disagreement.

WILLIAM RICHARDSON.
IRA W. WOOD.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 22867.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 22867. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

Amendment No. 1, the case of Hugh L. Freeman (H. R. 15658): The House passed this at $30 per month. Since it passed the House a law has been enacted which gives soldiers of the Mexican War $30 per month, and hence the item was stricken from the bill. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 2, Nathaniel L. Lawrence (H. R. 4324): The House passed this at $12 per month. The Senate struck the item from the bill on the grounds that disability was not incurred in the service. The Senate recedes from the amendment.

Amendment No. 3, Louis O. Edgar (H. R. 18750): The House passed this at $30 per month. The Senate cut the amount to $20 on the grounds that the examining board recommended a total rating of only $18 per month, and the soldier's condition does not warrant a higher rating. The House recedes.

WILLIAM RICHARDSON.
IRA W. WOOD.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 23515.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 23515. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

REED SMOOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

Amendment No. 1, Hugh J. McKane (H. R. 538): The House passed this at $18 per month. The Senate reduced the amount to $12 on the grounds that there was some question as to a higher rating being warranted. The Senate recedes.

Amendments Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, and 8 are merely corrections of errors and in no way affect the amounts carried by the items. The House recedes from its disagreement to these amendments.

Amendment No. 6, Thomas H. Davis (H. R. 7668): The House passed this at $20 per month. The Senate reduced the amount to $12 per month on the grounds that disability did not warrant a higher rating. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 9, Evelyn Barnette (H. R. 15765): The House passed this at $50 per month. The Senate struck the item from the bill on the grounds that the report showed a financial condition which did not warrant granting an increase of pension. Since that time evidence has been filed with the conferees showing that the property held by the widow did not belong to her. The Senate recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 10, Noah Y. Ream (H. R. 17529): The House allowed $30 per month to a soldier of the Mexican War. The Senate struck the item from the bill on the grounds that the soldier can now receive the same amount by applying at the bureau. The House recedes from its disagreement.

WILLIAM RICHARDSON.
IRA W. WOOD.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 22194.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 22194. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 903).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 22194), granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

Amendment No. 1, Alice Downing (H. R. 15514): The House passed this at $12 per month and $2 for each minor child. The Senate struck the item from the bill on the grounds that the soldier's death was not due to service, but the Senate recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 2, Thomas Joyce (H. R. 16637): The House passed this at $50 per month. The Senate struck the item from the bill on the grounds that it is a second special act for a soldier of the Indian wars. The Senate recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 3 is merely a correction of a typographical error, and the House recedes.

WILLIAM RICHARDSON.
IRA W. WOOD.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 23765.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 23765. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 900).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 23765) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

WILLIAM RICHARDSON,
IRA W. WOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. J. MCCUMBER,
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

Amendment No. 1, Alfred B. Light (H. R. 9804): This item passed the House at $30. Since it passed the House a general pension law has been enacted which will give the soldier the same amount by making application at the bureau, and the Senate therefore cut it from the bill. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment.

Amendments Nos. 2 and 3, Jane R. Bonnin (H. R. 14349) and Jane R. Adams (H. R. 16409): These are cases in which the House proposes to increase the pension of widows of soldiers of the Mexican War to $24 per month. The Senate cut both items to $20 per month in accordance with the usual custom of that body in allowing increases to widows of soldiers of both the Mexican and Civil Wars. The House recedes from its disagreement to these amendments.

WILLIAM RICHARDSON.
IRA W. WOOD.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 25069, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 25069, the sundry civil appropriation bill, with Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill. The first business before the House is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I believe a point of order was pending against the amendment which I offered. I do not desire to argue it.

I ask unanimous consent to correct the amendment I offered in the committee on yesterday, as indicated.

Mr. MANN. That has already been done in the House.

Mr. SISSON. I want to correct the RECORD and get it properly before the Chairman of the committee, and so that it will read as the amendment which is now in the hands of the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection——

Mr. SISSON. I just ask that the balance of the amendment, or the portion that was left out, be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That so much of an act approved June 25, 1910, being "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes," and the act approved March 4, 1911, amending said act, as refers to enlarging the Capitol Grounds, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, said portion of said act being as follows, to wit.

Mr. SISSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, the point of order against the amendment strikes me as not being a point of order that is well taken, because on the face of the amendment an appropriation of $500,000 is carried in it. This amendment which I offer reduces the expenses $500,000. Under the Holman rule this amendment which I offer is in order. Now, the Chair will take into consideration that this act went into the sundry civil bill in 1911 as an amendment to that act. Now, since it was legislation which was put upon the sundry civil bill, this being a bill of like character and like kind, it is simply an amendment to repeal so much of the sundry civil act as refers to enlarging the Capitol Grounds. And it unquestionably reduces expenses $500,000 a year up until the final purchase would be consummated under the present law, which would be perhaps 10 or 12 years, and the saving on the face of the amendment would be $500,000, and on the whole legislation at least five or six millions of dollars.

Now, under the Holman rule, if the Holman rule means anything, this amendment ought to be considered in order under that rule.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will permit——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MANN. This is not an amendment to any item in the bill, hence it could not reduce any amount carried by the bill. The provision in the bill has gone out on a point of order and is no part of it.

The original provision in the bill for enlarging the Capitol Grounds was ruled out by the Chair on a point of order, and that ruling is to the effect that it never was a part of the bill. The gentleman understands that when the Chair rules a portion of a bill out on a point of order it is as though it never had been in the bill.

Now, there is no amount carried by the bill for this item for this purpose. Hence no amendment can reduce the amount carried by the bill, because the bill does not carry anything. The gentleman probably had not thought of that point, having the idea——

Mr. SIMS. There was an amendment offered.

Mr. MANN. An amendment offered from the floor is quite a different thing. There is no provision in the rules against offering an amendment from the floor. The gentleman evidently had in mind that the item in the bill remained in the bill, carrying an appropriation of $500,000, and this would reduce that. But this proposition comes now as though that item had never been in the bill, because it was in there contrary to the rule. That has been stricken out, not by the committee, not by the House, but by the Chairman, on the point of order. The amendment offered by the gentleman also, even if the original item were in the bill, is not germane. It has been contended in some cases, and I think fairly well contended, that where you have a bill to amend a section of a law, that that may authorize the repeal of the law. But that is not always allowed, even though you are attempting to amend a law. It is not always allowable to amend other parts of the law or to repeal a law, but there is no proposition here to amend a law. Here was an original item in the bill to make an appropriation for the purpose of carrying out a law. Does that authorize an amendment to repeal the law? I think no one can find any precedent going to that extent, and there are many precedents to the contrary. And it is not germane to propose to repeal a law based upon a proposition to make an appropriation under the law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The part of the so-called Holman rule, Mr. Chairman, to which I wish to call attention provides:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has pointed out that there is no provision in the bill providing for the continuation of this work, and the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] is not an amendment to any provision in the bill. I do not find anything in the rule which makes in order a provision or amendment to the pending amendment.

The Chair can readily see to what that would lead. He can see that amendments which, under no reasoning whatever would be in order on the bill, could easily be offered and held to be in order by an arrangement whereby an amendment that would be germane and in order would first be offered, and then some matter that could not possibly be offered by itself under the rules would be offered as an amendment to it. It seems to me that such a construction of the rules would be far beyond what was ever contemplated.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I think the first objection urged by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is a very highly technical one, because the rule is broader than that. These gentlemen now offer an amendment to this bill which carries in that amendment an appropriation of $500,000.

Now, in order that we may save $500,000, not only carried in the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], but in order that we may save $500,000 in the future——

Mr. SIMS. Five million dollars——

Mr. GARNER. Yes; $5,000,000 in the future——

Mr. SISSON (continuing). This amendment which I offer unquestionably reduces the item which is now called or known as an amendment. Now, it is entirely too technical to say that because the present law provides for $500,000 a year, when in accordance with that statute now in existence you offer to appropriate the $500,000 required to be appropriated by law, it is not in order to repeal the statute requiring the $500,000 which is then offered. To say that it is not in the bill is a purely technical objection, one that finds nothing in substance. This is germane to the amendment that is offered here, because it is the very crux of that amendment. If you repeal the law, there is no authority for the $500,000, and if you may, in sundry civil appropriation bills, fasten charges upon the Government, then it is a peculiar rule of the House, and the Holman rule must be peculiarly construed if in the same bill, in order to retrench expenditures, you can not repeal the provision which was carried in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a word more. Supposing on any appropriation bill which comes before the House there is no item in the bill then relating to a matter, and suppose some gentleman on the floor offers an amendment to make an appropriation. Does anyone contend that the mere offering of that amendment from the floor permits the House, under the rules, to repeal any law relating to the subject matter of that amendment? That would permit any legislation upon an appropriation bill at any time. It would permit the offering and the voting on any legislation at the whim of any two gentlemen in the House, because there is no way of preventing a man from offering an amendment for an appropriation, and then anyone can offer an amendment to repeal an act of legislation on the subject that brings the legislation before the House without consideration by a committee or anybody else.

Now, the purpose of these rules is to prevent the bringing up of matters which have received no consideration, to prevent the throwing into the House of propositions on which gentlemen are not prepared to vote or to intelligently understand without proper consideration. But if the Chair makes the precedent that any Member on the floor, by offering an amendment for an appropriation, thereby throws open the door to legislation by cutting out that amendment as a substitute, there is no limit to what can be done and no protection under the rules.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question in that connection.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. Suppose that in this particular case the committee had recommended no appropriation in the bill, and then had offered an amendment on the floor of the House, and because it is offered here we then can not propose to repeal the law upon which that appropriation is based by the committee taking such a course. Then you would prevent any opportunity to reduce expenditures by repealing the law?

Mr. MANN. The House is not required to vote in the item because it is offered on the floor. The Committee on Appropriations does not have jurisdiction over the legislation. Under the claim of the gentleman from Mississippi, if it be allowed, there would be no use for any other committees than the Committee on Appropriations; there would be no use to consider any bills except appropriation bills, because any Member by offering an amendment to make an appropriation could throw the whole subject matter involved in the amendment or in the law authorizing the appropriation open to consideration upon the floor.

Mr. SIMS. If this amendment is voted in appropriating $500,000, which is authorized and has authority of law, then no amendment could be offered to repeal that act based on reducing the appropriation.

Mr. SISSON. This bill was referred by the Speaker to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANN. But they have not reported it, and it was an improper reference.

Mr. SISSON. As to this particular item, neither the chairman nor will the committee say that the full committee agreed upon it. An amendment was to be prepared, and I have prepared an amendment now—the amendment which the gentleman from North Carolina would have offered to this bill——

Mr. FITZGERALD. O Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's statement is not quite accurate. There was some difference of opinion among the members of the committee about the acquisition of some of this property, and it was believed, and my understanding was, that the gentleman from Mississippi desired to have an amendment prepared which would have eliminated certain parcels from the property to be acquired, and then he would have been content; but when such an amendment was prepared and suggested to him, my information is that he said he would support that amendment, and then try to have the entire provision repealed. Of course, it was not to be expected that men would make a compromise to surrender all they were willing to and then leave the gentleman from Mississippi free to fight to have the entire provision repealed.

Mr. SISSON. That was not the point I was calling the attention of the House to. That was the original item in the bill, which was passed by the committee, and it has never been called together since to consider it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Mississippi has been conferred with.

Mr. SISSON. It is true the gentleman came to me, and I told him I would be glad to support the amendment cutting out three or four squares.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman should not say that I came to him; the gentleman was present at a hearing in which the gentleman in charge of the condemnation proceedings testified, and the matter was thoroughly discussed. I was necessarily absent later, and requested the gentleman from North Carolina to prepare the amendment. I believe the gentleman from Mississippi understood what occurred. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] informed me that when he submitted it to the gentleman from Mississippi the gentleman said he was perfectly willing to support that amendment, but when it was adopted he would then endeavor to have the law repealed. The gentleman from North Carolina said he then dropped the entire matter.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment was not prepared by the gentleman from North Carolina, but he asked if it would be satisfactory to me, and I told him that it would not; that I was opposed to the whole proposition, but if the amendment was offered I would support it. But to go back, Mr. Chairman, you will find that the bill I introduced was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and if the Committee on Appropriations had no jurisdiction, then there should have been a motion on the part of those gentlemen who wanted a new reference to have the bill referred to the proper committee. If they took jurisdiction of the proposition and reported it back to the House after the reference, then they have jurisdiction over the whole matter.

Mr. MANN. If the bill was referred, as the gentleman states, to the Committee on Appropriations, and they had reported back the bill, no point of order could have been made after the report to the House.

Mr. CANNON. And if the gentleman will pardon me, that bill would have gone to the calendar, and would not have been privileged as general appropriation bills and revenue bills are privileged.

Mr. MANN. That brings up the precise question. There is another provision of the Holman rule:

Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any joint commission authorized by law, or the House members of any such commission having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment, which amendment being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures.

If the reference of this bill to the Committee on Appropriations gave jurisdiction to that committee over the subject matter this matter could be brought before the House upon the report from the Committee on Appropriations recommending the enactment of the legislation.

Take, for instance, the ordinary case. The Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction over the appropriations for the District of Columbia. The Committee on the District of Columbia has jurisdiction over legislation. Now, will the gentleman from Mississippi contend that because the Appropriations Committee has jurisdiction over appropriations for the District and reports the District appropriation bill I can offer an amendment on the floor of the House to make an appropriation, and thereupon he can move to substitute for that legislation relating to the District of Columbia? For instance, here is a pat case that may come up. We appropriate in the District bill for the execution of the excise laws. Suppose I offer an amendment in reference to the excise laws. Does the gentleman think that upon that amendment, without the report of a committee, without the consideration of a committee, he can offer an amendment fixing the rate of excise, the rate of license under the excise laws, so as to reduce expenditures?

Mr. SISSON. I do not think that would be a case in point—to fix the excise law, which is a law to collect taxes, paying money into the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. Suppose he should propose to repeal the laws providing for a license and thereby prohibit certain collections?

Mr. SISSON. That could not be in order under the Holman rule.

Mr. MANN. Why not?

Mr. SISSON. Because it does not reduce expenses.

Mr. MANN. Oh, certainly it would reduce expenses.

Mr. SISSON. It would take taxation away from the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. But it would reduce expenses. It would cut out the collection of the excise.

Mr. SISSON. If the collection should be greater than the excise, that might be true.

Mr. MANN. It may reduce the revenues, but it would reduce the expenses.

Mr. SISSON. If you reduce the revenues more than you reduce the expenses, then it is a question whether you reduce the expenses.

Mr. MANN. That is a matter of argument always.

Mr. SISSON. It would not be a reduction of expenses on the face of the bill.

Mr. MANN. It would be a reduction of the expenses, because you reduce the amount of expenses. There is no limit. If the gentleman's contention should prevail, any Member on the floor, by the offering of an amendment on the District appropriation bill, could throw into the House the consideration of any legislation relating to the District of Columbia without any reference to the Committee on the District of Columbia at all.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, if the legislation which was offered was legislation which the Committee on Appropriations had originally put upon the statute was legislation belonging to the District bill, and if to repeal the legislation so placed upon the statute by the Committee on Appropriations it afterwards offered to appropriate money under a law which was passed on an appropriation bill, and when the same bill was under consideration a motion was made to amend the original law carrying the appropriation, if it reduces expenses, then certainly it ought to be in order. Is it possible that under the Holman rule a committee can obtain jurisdiction for the purpose of putting an expense upon the people, passing a law for the purpose of putting a burden upon the Treasury, and that the same committee which places the burden upon the people can not find in itself the right to withdraw the burden? If originally the District bill had not carried the item, but the legislation had occurred originally on the appropriation bill and had been carried as an amendment to the appropriation bill, a law authorizing an expenditure, then that committee that had the jurisdiction certainly would have the right then, or ought to have the right under the Holman rule, to repeal the law for which they themselves are responsible. And, with that idea, I presume, this bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I presume that that was the cause of the reference of the bill to that committee. If that reference was a correct reference, if the Speaker referred it correctly under the rule, then certainly this amendment would be in order under the rule.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, whatever may have been my position originally upon the merits of this proposition, I am now more interested in the correct ruling upon the point of order than in the disposition hereafter of the amendment should it be held to be in order. It is important, Mr. Chairman, if we are to amend existing laws upon an appropriation bill, that we follow the rule that we have inaugurated for the purpose of allowing such amendments. For myself I do not stand in so much awe of the sacredness of appropriation bills from being amended by the House as do others when those amendments are necessary and can not be procured in any other way. That is a question that I may discuss hereafter on another bill. I shall not do so now. Suffice it to say that in the history of the English-speaking people and in the history of this country some of the most wholesome legislation in the country of our forefathers across the water and in this House and in the Senate has been enacted on appropriation bills. But, Mr. Chairman, it does seem to me that this proposition does not meet the requirements of the rules that we have adopted. I shall not stop to discuss the proposition that has been discussed with reference to the reduction of expenditures, but I simply desire to call the attention of the Chair to the latter part of the Holman rule. We had an instance of that at this session of Congress when the pension appropriation bill was under consideration. The matter was given some attention by the Committee on Appropriations and the subcommittee having that bill under consideration. We first reported to this House a bill which had been drafted, had been referred to the Committee on Appropriations and considered by that committee, reported to the House, and placed on the calendar. That bill involved a change in the method of paying pensions, so that instead of paying them by vouchers and receipts they were to be paid by checks. When the pension appropriation bill was under consideration the bill to which I have just referred, which had been considered by the Committee on Appropriations and had been favorably reported by it and placed on the calendar, was offered as an amendment. A point of order was suggested or reserved, as I recall, by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. The Chair ruled it in order because the Committee on Appropriations, taking jurisdiction of the bill, had reported it favorably. It had been referred to it I think properly, although the question of jurisdiction, if it had been raised, could not be raised at that late hour after the committee had taken jurisdiction and reported the bill. As I say, the Committee on Appropriations, in compliance with the second provision of the Holman rule, had considered the bill and acted favorably upon it and reported it to this House. The amendment was held to be in order by the then Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BOOHER. That was a correct ruling, admitted so by the gentleman who reserved or made the point of order.

So that it does not mean, Mr. Chairman, that any member of a committee or anyone else, simply because a bill may have been introduced and referred to a committee for consideration, can offer that bill as an amendment to a pending appropriation bill unless all of the provisions of the rule have been complied with.

The chief requirement of the provisions of the Holman rule is that it shall be upon the report of a committee or a joint commission, and that means something. The proper construction of this rule, so far as that is concerned, must mean that no amendment is in order under that provision unless it complies strictly with the rules. This rule is one of long standing. It makes exceptions to the acknowledged and accepted rules of the House in vogue for 100 years or more. The common, accepted construction of all statutes and all parliamentary rules and laws is that where you make an exception to the general rule you must strictly comply with it. It is not necessary to construe strictly this rule, however. The ordinary, plain, reasonable construction of the provision is that it is not in order to offer an amendment in the nature of a bill unless the requirements contained in the exception are complied with. For the orderly government of the House, to prevent confusion and delay, and, I might say, chaos in the consideration and passage of these great appropriations through the House, it seems to me that is the only reasonable construction to put upon it. Otherwise you open the door wide for any man who desires to amend an appropriation bill by enacting legislation originally or repealing legislation which he desires to repeal, to introduce a bill either to enact or repeal legislation, having it referred to a committee for consideration, having no report of that committee, but simply offering the amendment because he has introduced and has pending before some committee some such bill. It does not matter that it may have been referred to the Appropriations Committee, whether they have jurisdiction of it or whether they assume jurisdiction of it, and that assumption has been acquiesced in by the House. So that I repeat, Mr. Chairman, the importance of the ruling is that the exception which is here made for the purpose of reducing expenditures and enacting legislation along that line can not be carried out unless the rule is construed as it was intended, and reasonably intended, and strictly construed; otherwise, I say we are liable to be led into confusion worse confounded.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, the proviso referred to by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] is simply an enlargement, an extension of the Holman rule, which does not narrow the rule at all, because the last clause before the proviso gives the right to a Member on the floor, to an individual Member, to offer an amendment where the compensation of any person is reduced, or where it reduces the number of employees or the amount of money covered by the bill.

That right is given to every Member of the House, if that condition existed at the time of the offering of the amendment.

The proviso, however, goes further and says:

Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any joint commission authorized by law or the House Members of any such commission having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment.

That is simply an enlargement of the first provision giving the right to members of the committee that would not be given to an individual who had made no investigation. Therefore it is an enlargement and not a narrowing of the Holman rule.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. The provision which you propose to strike out is $500,000?

Mr. SISSON. The $500,000 has been stricken out, but there is an amendment now offered, and there is an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT. That amendment has not been adopted. In what way do you reduce the amount carried in the bill?

Mr. SISSON. Suppose we save $500,000. Suppose we were to adopt my amendment as an amendment to this amendment, then could not you vote my amendment down and would you not then get it?

Mr. BARTLETT. We would just simply meet the conditions as presented. The rules require you to reduce the amount carried in the bill.

Mr. SISSON. That is purely technical.

Mr. BARTLETT. It may be.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard. It does not seem to me that this amendment should be regarded in the light of not having been in the bill or not in it for this reason. It was in the bill as first offered coupled with the proviso. The point of order was made to the proviso and sustained as to the proviso, but as a matter of course the point of order was made to the whole paragraph and this language went out with it, and it is simply reoffered by the gentleman from New York——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I beg the gentleman's pardon, the gentleman is mistaken. The point of order was reserved on the proviso by the gentleman from Tennessee, and to the whole paragraph by the gentleman from Mississippi. The gentleman from Mississippi insisted that the entire paragraph go out because part was subject to the point of order and that took it out.

Mr. SIMS. I do not controvert that fact, but the portion now offered by way of amendment was in the bill, and no point of order would lie to it if only so much as now offered had been in the bill and nothing in the way of legislation connected with it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. All of these rules are technical.

Mr. SIMS. I know they are, and decidedly too much so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And to say it is a mere technical objection does not amount to anything, because every objection offered under the rules of the House is a technical objection and these rules were designed for the purpose of enabling the House in a proper and orderly manner to conduct its business.

Mr. SIMS. But the amendment by way of fiction is not in the bill——

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not a matter of fiction.

Mr. SIMS. Well, by reason of the question of the point of order on the whole paragraph that only applied to the proviso in the paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a matter of fact and not a matter of fiction.

Mr. SIMS. Now, let me say this to the gentleman from New York: That the letter killeth while the spirit maketh alive. Now, what is the object of the Holman rule or what is the object of proposing to permit legislation on an appropriation bill or the necessity for it? It is to save money to the Government. If the amendment did not save money for the Treasury, if it did not reduce expenditures in the form in which it is offered, it ought to cut no figure whatever, and a liberal construction of this rule certainly would, so far as that is concerned, apply to this proposition.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, if that reasoning is accurate all you have to do under the guise of the Holman rule is to offer an amendment repealing every office that exists under the Government and say you are coupling something equitable, just, and so forth, with it.

Mr. SIMS. I am not contending for any such latitude.

Mr. SHERLEY. But the very force and very purpose of parliamentary law is to require that you do a thing according to the law and not according to the spirit.

Mr. SIMS. Now, suppose this amendment the gentleman from New York has offered had been in the bill uncoupled with the proviso. Would not the amendment, by way of substitute, be in order? I think it would. Now, the effect of the amendment now offered by the gentleman from New York is exactly the same as to this bill as though it appeared in the bill as reported, and I think it is equally as important that the Holman rule apply to the amendment of the gentleman as though it was a part of the bill as reported.

Now, the question of whether it is germane or not or whether the amendment could be offered and sustained if no other proviso had been in there is a different question, which I am not undertaking to discuss, as I am not as well prepared to discuss these things as the distinguished gentlemen who have discussed them. But in construing the Holman rule I do think the spirit and purpose should dominate in any construction given the Holman rule, because the object, no doubt, is to permit the Appropriations Committee to make any reduction in expenses by such necessary legislation as enables them to make that reduction. And I know nothing better and more germane than to repeal a paragraph of a law heretofore passed by and through the Appropriations Committee that enabled them not to further make that appropriation. Now, suppose the Appropriations Committee itself had brought in this amendment; it seems to me that in order to enable the committee to make that reduction so much of a law upon which it was based should be repealed that the committee should be permitted—or a Member of the House, if the committee does not do it—to present such legislation, confined, as it is in this case, to negative action, not to affirmative legislation, and simply repealing that which authorizes the committee to take the action it has taken.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Suppose we had under consideration the general deficiency bill, which authorizes an amendment to any service in the Government as a deficiency, and some Member offers an amendment to the deficiency bill. Does the gentleman contend, then, that the offering of that amendment would authorize some one else to offer as a substitute a proposition to repeal the law creating the Army——

Mr. SIMS. I am confining my remarks to the particular matter before the committee in construing the rules to enable the committee to do by the Holman rule what was intended.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman make any distinction between the two? If so, I would like to hear it.

Mr. SIMS. I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asked you if under the general deficiency bill an item was carried in the bill——

Mr. MANN. Not for an item that was carried in the bill at all.

Mr. SISSON. If an amendment was offered from the floor to carry an item in the sundry civil bill, do you believe, then, it would be in order to repeal the law authorizing the item? It would simply mean, if the House wanted to reduce any expenses, if you had any confidence in the membership of the House, if it was an improper expenditure of money, they would vote for your amendment. If it was a proper expenditure of money, they would promptly vote for it. It would simply enable the House to vote on the proposition.

Mr. MANN. The rules are designed to prevent forcing the House to vote on a proposition which is under consideration.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman assume the House would put on a proposition without knowing anything about it?

Mr. MANN. I not only assume they will, but I have seen them do it.

Mr. SIMS. If we should repeal a portion of a law or the whole of a law simply to save expenditure, it does not follow that we have to follow it with affirmative legislation to take the place of the law; but when we repeal a certain part of the law that requires further affirmative legislation it would only be properly so much of the law as the present appropriation is based on, and comes within at least the spirit, and ought to come within the letter of any such rule.

Mr. SISSON. As in this case, the Appropriations Committee took away from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds the law authorizing the purchase of this property.

Mr. SIMS. As I say, I am discussing this alone with reference to the construction of a rule enabling legislation on appropriation bills and not all possible complications that might follow by reason of applying the rule prohibiting legislation on an appropriation bill and only so much of it as is authority for making the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill as presented to the House contains this paragraph:

Enlarging the Capitol Grounds: To continue the acquisition of the land described in the sundry civil appropriation act, approved June 25, 1910, and as authorized and prescribed in said act, for enlarging the Capitol Grounds, $500,000: Provided, That in addition to the persons named in the said sundry civil act the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall be a member of the commission constituted to acquire said land, and hereafter any three members thereof shall constitute a quorum and be competent to transact the duties devolving on them.

As to that paragraph the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] reserved a point of order as to all that which comes after the word "Provided." The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] reserved and made a point of order to the entire paragraph. The Chair, in ruling, overruled the point of order to everything in the paragraph before the word "Provided" and sustained the point of order for everything that followed the word "Provided." When that ruling was made, that entire paragraph was then out of the bill for every purpose.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] then offered the following as an amendment to the bill:

Enlarging the Capitol Grounds: To continue the acquisition of land described in the sundry civil appropriation act, approved June 25, 1910, and as authorized and prescribed in said act, for enlarging the Capitol Grounds, $500,000.

Thereupon the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] offered a substitute to that amendment repealing the act referred to in the amendment which authorized the appropriation of $500,000.

The question is now raised upon a point of order as to whether the substitute offered by the gentleman from Mississippi is permissible under what is commonly known as the Holman rule, which is section 2 of Rule XXI, and which reads as follows:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any joint commission authorized by law or the House Members of any such commission having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

The Chair thinks that nothing which comes in the above rule after the word "Provided" need be considered in determining the point of order. The question hinges solely upon that part of the Holman rule which is quoted, which comes before the word "Provided." The pertinent part of that section of the Holman rule reads as follows:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

The first question which arises is: Can there be legislation in an appropriation bill under that part of the rule which I have just read? It seems quite evident to the Chair that under the rule there can be legislation, because the rule says—and so forth. That clearly implies that existing law may be changed because of the use of the words therein, "changing existing law."

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except—

If existing law can be changed, under the rule it must be germane, and so the next question arises as to whether or not the substitute offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] is germane to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

We are all familiar with the meaning of the word "germane," in its legislative sense at least, but inasmuch as a dictionary lies on the table before the Chair, the Chair has taken occasion to get the definition from that, and the definition that it gives is—

Any close relationship to.

The amendment offered by the gentleman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I can refer the Chair to a decision made on the 1st of April, 1910, that an amendment proposing to repeal a law is not in order as an amendment or substitute to an amendment modifying one section of the law. It was decided on April 1, 1910.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would have preferred not to have had his chain of thought broken, but to have had the precedent presented to him later. Before finally ruling the Chair will look at the reference mentioned by the gentleman from New York. When interrupted by the gentleman from New York the Chair was dealing with the word "germane" and was about to read, and will now read, from the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, which treats of the act approved June 25, 1910, which authorizes this appropriation. The substitute offered by the gentleman from Mississippi proposes to repeal the act which is mentioned in the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Chair is of opinion that there is such a close relationship between the two that the substitute offered by the gentleman from Mississippi in treating of the act of June 25, 1910, is germane to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York in treating of the same act—that of June 25, 1910.

The Chair is, up to this time, of the opinion that under the Holman rule there is a right to change existing law provided it is germane; and provided, further, it meets any one of the other conditions set out in the rule. The Chair first rules that the substitute offered to the amendment is germane. Before the substitute can be held to be subject to a point of order, or that it is not subject to a point of order, other parts of the Holman rule must be applied to the item as tests. If existing law can be changed in an appropriation bill provided it is germane, it must have one or the other of the additional qualifications. It must, in one instance, in addition to being germane, retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States. The substitute offered by the gentleman from Mississippi to the amendment does not meet that requirement of the rule. Next, in order that it may be in order the substitute offered by the gentleman from Mississippi must be a reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States. It does not come under that requirement of the rule. The Chair is of the opinion, however, that it does come under the next requirement, which reads as follows:

Or by the reduction of the amounts of money covered by the bill.

The Chair first holds that existing law under the Holman rule can be changed, provided it is germane, and the Chair holds that it is germane. Further, that it is good provided it reduces the amount of money covered by the bill. The Chair holds that it does reduce the amount of money covered by the bill to the extent of $500,000.

Now, as to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] that if the contention of the gentleman from Mississippi were correct all offices could be abolished. The Chair is not called upon to decide that point and will not do so; but, in passing, it may be remarked that there is a provision in the Holman rule for the reduction of the number and salary of officers of the United States. If the Chair were called upon to decide that point he would, as on the present occasion, decide it just as he has the point which is now raised. The Chair has quite clearly outlined his individual views about it, but will be glad to see the precedent to which the gentleman from New York has just referred before making the final ruling.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have sent for the precedent. I do not think that this amendment is germane to the amendment I have offered. My recollection is that the Senate put an amendment on the legislative bill changing one portion of the law relative to the corporation tax, and I offered a motion to recommit the Senate amendment to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report the Senate amendment amended so as to repeal the corporation-tax provision in the Payne-Aldrich tariff law. After a lengthy discussion it was held that to a provision proposing to amend one section of the law an amendment to repeal the law was not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. As to whether it is germane or not, the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York sets out specifically the date and approval and subject matter of which the law treats. The substitute offered by the gentleman from Mississippi treats of the same act referred to by the gentleman from New York in his amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, might I ask the Chair whether the Chair holds that the part of the bill the Chair ruled out on a point of order still remains a part of the bill for the purpose of considering this proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not ruled, but has indicated, unless shown an authority to the contrary, that he is inclined to rule that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is not any part of the bill, but that the substitute offered by the gentleman from Mississippi is germane and a proper amendment to the amendment which the gentleman from New York has offered.

Mr. MANN. I am asking for information, because these rulings are of value hereafter. Then I take it that the present opinion of the Chair is that if the substitute is a reduction of the amount carried by an amendment offered from the floor, that brings it within the Holman rule, regardless of the amount in the original bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The Chair is inclined to rule only on the question as to whether or not this substitute is germane to the amendment, but thinks it applies also to any part of the bill before it is accepted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I have the decision here to which I referred. On the 1st of April, 1910, I moved to recommit a Senate amendment—I think it was to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill—with instructions to report forthwith Senate amendment 78, amended so as to read as follows:

Provided, That the act of August 5, 1909, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," is hereby repealed.

Mr. GILLETT made the point of order. There was considerable discussion, and the Speaker ruled as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read the amendment which has been agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Concur with the following amendment:

"'Strike out all of amendment No. 78 and insert instead thereof the following:

"'For classifying, indexing, exhibiting, and properly caring for the returns of all corporations required by section 38 of an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, including the employment in the District of Columbia of such clerical and other personal services, and for rent of such quarters as may be necessary, $25,000: Provided, That any and all such returns shall be open to inspection only upon the order of the President, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and approved by the President.'"

The SPEAKER. The House will notice that this is a proposition or an amendment covering one specific subject in the tariff act—as to the returns made by corporations. It does not relate to the amount of the tax, the kind of corporations to be levied upon, the time of levying, or touching any other matter, but only and simply the returns of corporations.

Upon the motion to concur with an amendment, which amendment provides for striking out the Senate amendment and inserting what has just been read, the previous question was ordered, and the House has, on a yea-and-nay vote, agreed to the amendment, so that is a closed incident.

Now, the argument of the gentleman from New York brings up a very ingenious theory. But the Chair does not feel called upon to decide upon his theory, because it has been held—and, so far as the Chair has been able to ascertain, uniformly held—that where there is a proposition to amend a law in one particular—a specific particular—a proposition to amend generally or to repeal the law would not be germane. The Chair, after a hasty examination, finds as follows:

"Hinds' Precedents, volume 5, page 411:

"'5806. To a bill amendatory of an existing law as to one specific particular an amendment relating to the terms of the law rather than to those of the bill was held not to be germane.'"

Under that decision, if the amendment of the gentleman had been offered before the previous question operated it would not have been in order, as the precedents are uniform that you can not by a motion to recommit make that in order which would not have been in order if offered as an amendment. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

There was a provision, Mr. Chairman, in which an appropriation was made to carry out the provisions of the Payne-Aldrich law, imposing a tax on corporations and providing for the classifying and arrangement of the returns. The House had agreed to an amendment which modified the law in that it provided that these returns should not be made public except upon order of the President or under rules and regulations to be approved by him. I then offered what was in effect an amendment, being a motion to recommit the bill with instructions to report forthwith repealing the law, and it was held to be not germane.

In this instance, and this decision applies to this case particularly, in the bill as reported from the committee there was an appropriation to carry out the law and a provision amending the law in one particular. That would have placed the provision in the bill in exactly the same category as the amendment to section 38 of the Payne-Aldrich law, and a proposal to have repealed the law under this decision would not have been germane. In this instance, in the shape in which it comes before the House, there is no proposition to amend a law at all, but a proposition to appropriate to carry out the law without any suggested change. A proposition to repeal can not possibly be held to be germane, in my opinion, under the authorities. I recall this case very distinctly, because it was a matter of very great importance. It was carefully and elaborately discussed. The decision was based upon the precedents which had been made prior to that time. There was some doubt as to whether in a provision amending the law in one particular line a provision to repeal the law was in order. Decisions had been found to the effect that where a provision proposing to amend the law in more than one respect, in two or three respects, an amendment to repeal the law was germane. It was so held by Speaker Reed, but where the proposition was to amend the law in but one particular the decision was, and this followed what seemed to be the logic of the decision, that it was not in order.

In this case, if the gentleman had offered his amendment as a substitute for the provisions in the bill as reported from the committee, it would have come clearly within that decision. He is now offering his amendment as a substitute for an amendment which does not propose to change the law in any respect at all, but which merely provides for an appropriation. I do not see how under these decisions such an amendment can be held germane, and I call the attention of the Chair further to the fact that the definition of the word "germane," as given in the dictionary, is not the meaning ascribed to the word in the parliamentary practice of the House, because things may be intimately related to each other which under the parliamentary law would not be germane. For instance, in a bill providing for the admission of a Territory as a State, an amendment proposing to admit some other Territory as a State is not germane. They are somewhat intimately related, and yet if the bill proposed to admit two Territories as States into the Union, then the decisions are that a proposition to admit a third or a fourth Territory as a State would be germane. So that in determining the meaning of the word "germane" as used in the rules and procedure of the House of Representatives, the meaning ascribed to it in any standard dictionary as to the common acceptation of the word is not applicable.

It seems to me that under this decision, and under the decisions referred to, upon which the Speaker relied at that time, to a provision appropriating money to carry out existing law a proposition to repeal the law can not possibly be held to be germane. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that not only has this law been partly executed, but a judgment of the court has been entered under which certain property has been acquired, and that creates an entirely different relation.

Mr. SIMS. That would not vacate the proceedings that have already been had under the law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would vacate proceedings unless the awards had been finally confirmed by a decree of the court, because until a decree is entered confirming the awards Congress could abandon the proceedings at any time. After the decree is entered, it could not. But I do not believe that has any bearing particularly upon the matter. I merely wanted to call it to the attention of the Chair. Under the practice of the House, as far as I am familiar with it, and the decisions—and this decision has never been challenged since that time, over two years ago—to a proposition proposing to amend in one respect an amendment to repeal is not germane, and as this proposition does not propose to amend the law at all, I do not see how, to a mere appropriation, it could be held that a proposition to repeal is germane.

Mr. SIMS. Was the gentleman's motion to repeal the whole Payne-Aldrich law or the mere paragraph upon which the particular appropriation rested?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would repeal the whole law, but it made no difference at all, because the gentleman from Mississippi is not proposing to repeal part of one law, but is proposing to repeal part of two laws.

Mr. SIMS. He is not proposing to repeal the whole sundry civil bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; he is proposing to repeal a part of two appropriation acts.

Mr. SIMS. But not acts like the gentleman from New York refers to——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, that is immaterial; the same reason applies—that an attempt was made to repeal part or an entire act.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York treats of the act approved June 25, 1910, which authorizes the expenditure of $500,000 a year for the enlargement of the Capitol Grounds. The gentleman from Mississippi has offered a substitute for the repeal of that act. Now, the gentleman from Mississippi, in offering his substitute, did not refer to the act by its title and date of its approval, but he did more than that, he referred to it by its title, the date of its approval, and then quoted every word of the act, so it occurs to the Chair there is no escape under the conditions from the conclusion that the substitute is germane to the act. The Chair overrules the point of order, and in doing so agrees with the position taken by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] in his contention upon a former occasion with the then presiding officer of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the paragraph and pending amendments close in 10 minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, no.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have given more than two hours and a half. Everybody has been heard——

Mr. KAHN. The committee has.

Mr. SISSON. It has been on the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Mississippi himself stated that he would not occupy any more time.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I should like a little time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much time?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Five minutes. And there are several others who desire to be heard.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to state that I am going to try to fix a time at this time and see if we can finish this bill to-day.

Mr. KAHN. I want five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We took over an hour yesterday, and we have taken an hour and a half this morning.

Mr. KAHN. The chairman of the committee will admit that most of the time has been occupied by members of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. KAHN. I shall want five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no objection to the gentleman having that much time.

Mr. SIMS. I want to have five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon the pending amendment close in 30 minutes.

Mr. SISSON. Make it 35.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the purchase of the land between the Capitol——

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will suspend. When the Chair was about to put the question whether debate should close in 30 minutes the gentleman from Tennessee addressed the Chair.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I beg the Chair's pardon; I thought the Chair had put the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought the gentleman rose to object. No objection being heard, debate upon the pending matter will close in 30 minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the purchase of land between the Capitol and the Union Station as provided under the bill passed two years ago, and I therefore shall vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. I am not opposed, Mr. Chairman, to the law or, rather, I do not favor its repeal because of any objection to the personnel of the commission. It is composed of men who have rendered long, patriotic, and distinguished service to the country, and everyone knows that those gentlemen will administer the law and perform their duties under the law as best they can for the protection of the Federal Treasury and the people. But I do not believe it is right to take the money of the people, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of buying a great area of land between the Capitol and the Union Station purely for park purposes when, as a matter of fact, the land after it is bought can do the people and the Government of the United States absolutely no good. It has been stated upon this floor by the gentleman from Mississippi that much of this land is occupied; that a big hotel and apartment houses and splendid residences occupy a great portion of this land.

I have walked through that property, and I find a great many pieces of property there which are for rent to-day, and I have had the suspicion that possibly the movement which first brought about the passage of this law, the influences which were brought by the newspapers of Washington and by certain citizens of Washington to cause Congress to pass this law, were induced largely by the fact that this property is now in a particular section of the city which is not growing, but is depreciating in value, because the city is growing in another direction, and that the people who own this property are desirous that the Government should purchase it simply to relieve themselves of the burden of ownership. Now, Mr. Chairman, I favor beautifying the city of Washington. I think we ought to make it a beautiful city, and it is a beautiful city. Why, it was stated on the floor yesterday that the United States Government now controls or owns 54 per cent of the area of this city—in parks, streets, etc., whereas in other cities this class of property ranges from only 20 to 25 per cent. I think, however, that Congress possibly goes too far in this idea of beautifying the city and buying lands and opening them for park purposes. I noticed a few days ago that over in another body of this Capitol a bill was passed providing for the appropriation of a million seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars to build an armory for the District Militia, and it was provided that the people of the whole country should pay half the expense of that building in spite of the fact that the United States Government will furnish the land upon which it is built. The United States Government does not build armories for militia in other places. The only argument which I noticed in favor of the United States contributing half of the expenses of the building as well as the land, was the fact that it might be used for an inaugural ball once every four years.

Mr. Chairman, this Government owns and has purchased some of the most expensive portions of the property south of Pennsylvania Avenue, and it is hoped that some day the Treasury may be in condition whereby public buildings may be placed there for the occupany of the Department of State and possibly other departments, and thus save to this Government $600,000 a year in rent. We are told when the proposition is made to erect public buildings over the country that the Treasury will not admit it. I have heard gentlemen on the floor of this House state that it is not wise to authorize more public buildings on account of the condition of the Treasury, and yet those same gentlemen are advocating the purchase of this land at the cost, as has been stated on this floor, of $5,000,000, and it has also been stated that after it has been purchased it will take $2,000,000 to place it in a condition for parks, making a total of $7,000,000. This amount would build 140 buildings over this country at $50,000 apiece.

We have claims to-day which have been adjudicated by the Court of Claims as proper charges against this Government, and yet Members of this House and in another body oppose the payment of those claims, Mr. Chairman. And I venture the assertion if Members here will go back to their people and will tell them frankly that they voted for an appropriation or to maintain upon the statute books a law which provides for $7,000,000 expenditure in the city of Washington for purely park purposes, and then will tell them as frankly that the Government is paying $600,000 a year in rents to-day to owners of property in the city of Washington because we have not money in the Treasury to put up the necessary public buildings; if they will at the same time tell them also frankly that Congress has refused and denied to claimants over this country the right to an appropriation to pay their claims, notwithstanding the fact that those claims have been passed upon and declared proper and right against the Government, I do not believe the people will approve any such vote. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know who owns any of the property that is involved in this controversy. That is an entirely immaterial matter. The land ought to be purchased, for it can be purchased cheaper now than in the future. All the great capitals of the world are constantly buying property and are expending millions of dollars in beautifying those capitals.

In 1868 the city of Paris expended $135,000,000 in buying property for the purpose of widening and extending its boulevards and avenues, in making the city attractive. There was a good deal of criticism of the expenditure at the time, but the intervening years have amply justified it. It was a good investment. Paris to-day is looked upon as one of the most beautiful capitals in the world. It is the Mecca of hundreds of thousands of travelers from all over the world. They enjoy its parks, its boulevards, and its avenues. We admire the patriotism of the Frenchmen in having spent that amount of money to make Paris an attractive city. And as for going home and telling our constituents that we have voted money to beautify the National Capital, as suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], there is not a constituent of any Member of this House who does not feel proud whenever he comes here to find this city a beautiful one. [Applause.] Our constituents will certainly justify the expenditures in beautifying it.

The city of London in 1905 expended hundreds of millions of dollars in opening up new streets. The King's Way and Aldwych were constructed in the very heart of the English capital. If that work had been done a hundred years ago it could have been done for a fraction of the amount that it cost England in 1905. The city of Berlin is expending millions of dollars in the beautification of the German capital. The city of Rome has been improved in recent years at an enormous outlay. The city of Vienna has expended millions of dollars in widening and beautifying its streets.

That property which is covered by the pending amendment can be purchased cheaper to-day than it can be purchased at any time in the future. Property always enhances in value in a city like Washington. It is the Capital of a great Nation. Its future growth and importance should always be considered by the legislators gathered in this Capitol. The south side of Pennsylvania Avenue has been referred to. I agree that it is a conglomeration of ramshackle buildings that are a disgrace to the Capital. Why has it not been improved? Because it is believed that Congress some day will purchase all of that property and make it a part of the park system of the city. And this property that we are now discussing will be an eyesore to the capital so long as there are no general plans in regard to it. Several years ago Congress decided it should be purchased. There is always in the mind of the owner an idea that Congress will live up to the purchase plan. It is covered largely by a lot of old rubbish to-day.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] speaks of the houses being idle. They will continue idle if this law be repealed. I venture the assertion that there will not be an improvement on that property for years, and it will continue an eyesore. The property owners will not attempt to improve it, for they will feel uncertain as to the course Congress will pursue toward the land in question.

Take the city of Frankfort, in Germany. Within recent years it has been spending millions of dollars in widening its streets. It has put up a magnificent union railway station, not unlike ours, and it has a most superb plaza in front of it. The people there have gladly expended millions of dollars in beautifying their city. And so I could cite innumerable instances of what is being done all over the world in the way of beautifying cities. These cities are correcting the mistakes, the shortsightedness, if you please, of earlier periods. We are a young Nation. We want to make Washington the most beautiful capital in the world. We are the richest Nation in the world. It is a small, narrow policy, in my mind, to repeal a law of this kind. If the law be continued it will enable the people of this country, the American people, to have a capital commensurate with their dignity, their wealth, and their power.

I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] will be voted down. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I could take the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], who has just addressed the committee, and show him streets to-day in Washington which the people have to use which would be a disgrace to a city of 100,000 inhabitants. Exercise your public spirit where it will be a benefit to the people who want to use those streets. I will go with him and pay his car fare and show these streets to him this afternoon.

Now, this idea that our republican Government must manifest its magnificence and beauty in physical features only, by way of building great avenues and parks in order that those who happen to come to Washington who are going to stay here only a few days may see them and go home and have them approve of the expenditure of the money, is erroneous. Those people do not see these neglected streets I have mentioned. If we put this $500,000 on improvements in certain portions of th city of Washington that absolutely need them instead of buying property down here which will immediately make a demand for property in out-of-town divisions that are being boomed now by real estate men, it would be vastly better. Turn out these thousands who live in these houses now and cause them at once to have to seek other homes, and you accelerate the advance in price and enhance the value of lots now being held in the suburbs at fictitious, unreasonable, and speculative values.

Now, this committee had no such thought. This legislation was put on an appropriation bill at the other end of this Capitol. There was no time in which to consider it here; and, in justice to well-considered legislation, it ought to be repealed. Then bring in a bill, and have it well considered, and let us know what we are going to purchase.

Why, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] yesterday showed a map here delineating the land contemplated to be bought and showing that that land is absolutely unnecessary, relatively, to this Capitol square. If it is bought, and the buildings are removed, and the land is parked, it will make it look ridiculous. It will make it look like a one-winged eagle statue. It will make it look as though you had put up an eagle and taken a wing off of it. Put a wing on that square there and then you will have to have a wing here and another wing yonder. We have a Capitol square now that is symmetrical in its proportions. Millions of dollars have been put into this House Office Building here, and millions of dollars have been put into that Senate Office Building, and other millions of dollars have been put into other public buildings all over this District, and into parks galore. Indeed, there is danger now of getting lost in the city of Washington in the wilderness of unused and unoccupied parks.

That is the only excuse that can be given for the purchase of this land—the beautification of the city and the enlargement of the parks.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. I would like to ask the gentleman where is there a single park in the city of Washington that is not enjoyed and used by all the people, including the poor people?

Mr. SIMS. Those who go to the out-of-town parks are not the poor people. Tell me how many poor people ever put their feet inside of Rock Creek Park.

Mr. KAHN. I saw them there by the dozens and hundreds.

Mr. SIMS. How do they get there? There are no street cars running to it, and the street car companies are opposed to the putting of street cars there. The fact is that nobody but automobile owners ever get there. [Applause and cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment reported.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If anybody wishes to get time, let him use it now.

Mr. CANNON rose.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the debate is to be closed, I ask that the amendment be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already recognized the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CANNON. On which side is the gentleman?

Mr. CULLOP. I do not care to occupy time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair then recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, two years ago, or three—I believe it was three—this legislation was enacted. It has been executed as speedily as possible under the provisions of the law. It was bad in its conception, in my judgment, because it did gradually, year by year, what it ought to have done at once. In other words, condemning this property piecemeal enhances the property remaining after each condemnation.

There has been acquired, however, the two principal squares and the two most expensive squares just north of the Capitol, costing about $1,100,000. The decree has been confirmed, and whatever action might be taken by Congress in repealing this law, that property has been acquired.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. What are the two blocks that have been already acquired?

Mr. CANNON. The two blocks just north of the Capitol, between the Senate Office Building and New Jersey Avenue, down to the railroad property, which was formerly occupied by the old Baltimore & Ohio depot.

Mr. HARDY. Does the gentleman recall who was the owner of the property?

Mr. CANNON. I do not know any man that was the owner of a portion of it, save one. I have the impression that one or two houses belonged to the estate of former Representative Babcock, who died a number of years ago. But I do not care who it belongs to. If it ought to be acquired, what difference does it make who owns it? With all due respect to my friend from Texas, I do not see that there is any great point in his query.

Now, I am satisfied that if this Congress does not acquire it, some Congress in the future, better advised, will take every foot of this property. You may repeal this act, but there is the property. There is the great terminal, to which nearly a hundred million people who visit the city in a year will land. Here is the great Capitol, the greatest on earth, having no equal on earth. Here are the great office buildings belonging to the people, and I am satisfied that if this act should be repealed, in the end this property will cost vastly more to condemn in the future than it will cost to take it now.

It is easy to say that this property is going to cost $5,000,000 or $7,000,000, and $2,000,000 to improve it. Who gave the gentleman from Mississippi the right to make such statements? I state, and I am informed by men who ought to know, that the two blocks that have already been condemned are by far the most expensive property, and that the buildings on these two blocks, the improvements, cost as much as the ground cost. Much of this property is now vacant farther on toward the Plaza. I trust that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi to repeal the law will be voted down.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOP. I want to ask a question for information. Is any part of the vacant property between here and the Union Depot included in this matter, or has that been purchased?

Mr. CANNON. It is substantially all included in this matter. The only part that has been condemned are the two blocks between New Jersey Avenue and the Senate Office Building down to the street just in front of where the old Baltimore & Ohio Depot stood.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HARDY. I ask that the gentleman be given five minutes more in order to answer a question.

Mr. CANNON. I do not care for any further time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate has been limited.

Mr. CANNON. I would be glad to answer the gentleman's question if I had the time.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to buying this property between the Capitol and the Union Station. I did not ask the gentleman from Illinois who owned the land already acquired by the Government in order to make any deduction of impropriety, but merely as a matter of curiosity, and, broadly, I would like to know all the owners of the property which this law forces the Government to buy. I oppose the policy of forcing the Government to buy more and more land whenever some one may have property to sell and thinks it a good opportunity to unload it on the Government. I believe that the National Government has to-day all the property in Washington City that it needs for public uses. This matter of beautifying the National Capital is nice to talk about, but it has its reverse side also. I am reminded a little of an old gentleman I know who bought, first, 100 acres of land and then wanted every 100 acres adjoining that and then wanted all the land adjoining that, and there was no end to it. We seem to be in the condition of wanting to buy every piece of land within the city limits that is offered for sale on some plausible pretext that it might be of some use or benefit to the Government now or hereafter, or at least would beautify the city.

In the history of great nations there has always been an era of public improvement just preceding the era of public decay. Pericles beautified Athens, and at the end of his reign decay set in upon the Athenean Republic.

Herod was building temples and beautifying the city of Jerusalem, and provincial governors from Rome were beautifying other cities, in the days of Christ, while the people were suffering under enormous burdens of taxation. The old story of building monuments to the glory of kings and governments is as old as the history of the pyramids of Egypt. The swinging gardens of Babylon were an example of beautifying, and, doubtless, the people of Babylon were proud of the glories of Belshazzar. Every dead civilization found itself tottering to decay amid efforts at beautification and adornment and public expenditure for the glorification of the national capital.

I believe that governments should confine themselves to the useful purposes of government. Of course, more or less adornment and beautification is possible and consistent; but if we are to spend millions upon millions, and then millions more, in order to beautify this part of the city and that part of the city, in rivalry with the glories of other lands and other ages, some will repent our extravagance when our accumulated burdens have become unbearable; and if every time anybody who has a piece of property that he can not profitably use or dispose of he is encouraged to raid the Public Treasury by selling at a fancy price to the Government, there will be no end to this kind of exploitation. Interested parties will always find some plausible excuse to make the Government buy property. That is the way it has been ever since I have been here. I am told that many years ago the Government bought a block by the Belasco Theater under the plea that it was immediately needed for a public building. It is vacant still.

We are now confronted with a proposition to open up West Capitol Street and to pay millions of dollars for property on the south side of Pennsylvania Avenue. That would be the next thing. When the Union Depot was planned we started out with the proposition to buy a little stretch of property in front of the Union Depot, and now we want to widen that Plaza and then buy out all the land between this widened Plaza and the Capitol. Next it will be necessary to widen the roads out to Anacostia or between here and the navy yard, for what visitor to this city would like to go down along Pennsylvania Avenue and have to look on the shacks that are around the navy yard? We ought certainly to remove all those eyesores and beautify it and make it full of palaces, because all visitors to Washington want to see our navy yard.

Mr. Chairman, I have reached the conclusion that if the Government will attend to the economic administration of public affairs, the growth and beauty of this Capital will be spontaneous and will be made naturally by the people who settle here and find their profit in the growth of the city and the building of useful and needed structures. If the Government is beginning to spend vast sums or to erect buildings just for the purpose of beautification, such expenditure makes burdens, such burdens make poverty. This way lies the beginning of the ultimate decay, in my opinion. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to repealing the law providing for the acquisition of this property, and I am in favor of the amendment I offered to appropriate $500,000 to carry out the original intention of the law. I regret very much that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] has not recently read the history of the Capitol Buildings and Grounds, and the debate which took place when a very distinguished Representative from the State of Mississippi advocated and urged legislation providing for the two wings of this Capitol and the acquisition of the grounds surrounding it. The people of the United States are indebted more than they will ever be able to repay to Jefferson Davis for the two wings of this Capitol and for the beautiful Capitol Grounds. [Applause.] I regret that it is another gentleman from Mississippi who is not inspired with the same broad views as Jefferson Davis, who is attempting at this time to prevent the completion of the great work for which he is entitled to so much credit.

It is unjust and unfair to assert that this is a scheme to help somebody unload property upon the Government. If I were the owner of property in the tract to be taken I should resist and exert every influence I had to prevent the property being acquired by the Federal Government at this time. No man who is familiar with the development of great capitals, who is familiar with the prosperity and the wealth of this country, and the situation of this Capitol in relation to the Union Depot can doubt for an instant that some day the Federal Government will acquire the property between the Capitol and the Union Depot as a part of the parking system of this city. It should be done now. We should not wait until those who own the property, by letting it remain idle or permitting it to be used for purposes that should not be within the shadow of the Capitol, may be, with the growth of time and the development and improvement of the city, able to obtain in condemnation proceedings a much larger compensation than can possibly be obtained at this time. The improvement of municipalities is something which benefits all of the people of the community. It does not benefit so much the wealthy, those who are in a position to spend their leisure moments in congenial surroundings and under circumstances that appeal to the imagination, but to those who can never leave the community, who are compelled to spend their entire lifetime in it, these movements to beautify cities result most beneficially. People come to this Capital from all over the United States and from all over the civilized world. Who is there in the House or in the Congress who would advocate to-day the selling of a single foot of the property surrounding this Capitol? Who would not rejoice if the property facing the Office Building for the House and the Office Building for the Senate on both sides happened to be owned by the Government of the United States? Why speak of having a building essential for the prosecution of Government business and for the comfort and convenience of the people's representatives and for the gratification of the people when they come here located amidst surroundings that are disgraceful to the community? What are five or six millions of dollars to 90,000,000 people when the making of this Capital such that it will be a credit and a pride to every citizen of the United States, no matter how humble, is involved? [Applause.]

We can not approach these questions in a small or niggardly spirit. We must look upon them with a broad mind, keeping in view the future and the fact that we are destined to be not as we are to-day—the greatest Government and the greatest Republic the world has ever known—but destined to be a Republic and to represent a civilization that we hope will keep in the forefront through all the ages. [Applause.] Our Capitol should represent and typify that civilization.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The question is on the adoption of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SISSON) there were—ayes 24, noes 32.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. SISSON and Mr. FITZGERALD to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 29, noes 38.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend so much of an act approved June 25, 1910, being "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes," as refers to enlarging the Capitol Grounds, so as to read as follows:

"Enlarging the Capitol Grounds: It is hereby declared to be the purpose of Congress to ultimately acquire all of squares No. 632, all that part of square No. 633 that lies west of the street or alley known as Arthur Place, 634, 680, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685, in the city of Washington, D. C., for the enlargement of the Capitol Grounds, and for the construction of a direct avenue of about 150 feet in width from the junction of Pennsylvania Avenue and First Street NW. to the Union Station Plaza, the center line of said avenue to be located on the axis of the Peace Monument and the site of the westerly foundation in said plaza. The Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds are hereby authorized and directed to acquire said premises by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, and to expend for that purpose not more than $500,000 in any one fiscal year, commencing with the year 1911, and the persons authorized to acquire such property shall annually, within said limit, purchase whatever of said property is in their judgment offered at the lowest prices relative to its actual value, provided they shall not purchase any property at above its fair actual value. If in any year there should not be offered property substantially up to said sum of $500,000 at its fair value or less, the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds are authorized to institute condemnation proceedings in order to secure any or all of the land herein authorized to be acquired, but for not to exceed what they estimate to be $500,000 worth in any one fiscal year. If such condemnation proceedings are deemed necessary, they shall be in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved August 30, 1890, providing a site for the enlargement of the Government Printing Office (Stat. L., vol. 26, chap. 837). For the execution of the foregoing, $500,000."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve it for a minute?

Mr. MANN. I understand that it is not debatable.

Mr. SISSON. Oh, yes, it is.

Mr. MANN. I understood that all debate on this proposition had been closed.

Mr. SISSON. I wanted to explain the amendment to the House. I ask unanimous consent to explain the amendment to the House. It will not take but a minute.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not disposed to cut off debate, but I think we have spent sufficient time upon this.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman from Illinois propose to discuss the point of order? If the gentleman is going to insist upon the point of order we might as well have it settled first. There is no use of occupying considerable time on this matter uselessly when we can not accomplish anything.

Mr. SISSON. Oh, I do not think it is useless.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there is no pretense that this is to repeal existing law. This is a modification of existing law. Neither the Chair nor anyone else can tell whether it is a retrenchment of expenditures. It is not the same proposition that was presented before. I do not propose to take the time of the House in discussing the point of order. I thought the other amendment was clearly subject to a point of order on grounds which I then stated. The Chair overruled that point of order. I think this amendment is subject to a point of order upon other grounds; that it is not a retrenchment of expenditures, but simply a modification of existing law, carrying the same amount of appropriation.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, in reference to the point of order I will state that the amendment which I offered eliminates certain squares of property, which reduces the amount that would finally be acquired in the purchase of the property embraced in the original act.

The property eliminated is the property that can be seen here and one square here [illustrating on map]. I will say that this was an amendment which the gentleman from New York and I were discussing and which Mr. PAGE was to prepare and to offer as a compromise on this matter eliminating certain sections of property——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand that the gentleman rejected that compromise.

Mr. SISSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, in offering this amendment I am sure that it does not present the same question which was in the other amendment which I offered; that on its face it does not reduce the expenditures carried in the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. I was in hopes that we might get a vote upon this matter by unanimous consent and exclude from the future purchase of this act the property which I do not think anybody insists we need in opening up a park between here and the Union Station, nor is it needed for the purpose of building a boulevard. It eliminates the property on either side of the Senate Office Building and the property that is not within the view and approach from the Capitol to the Union Station, and I think it would be useless to purchase this property for the purposes which the bill intended originally to cover. I think that it includes entirely more property than is necessary, and for that reason I offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that if the amendment reduces the amount of money covered by the bill that it would not be subject to the point of order. The ultimate purpose of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi is to reduce the cost finally, but the Chair does not believe that it means a reduction of the cost in this bill; or, in other words, the Chair knows officially that within the scope of the original act there is sufficient property to amount to more than $500,000 in addition to the $500,000 heretofore expended; and, as it does not reduce the amount of money contemplated to be expended in this bill, or any amendment thereto, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the substitute which I have offered here by substituting $400,000 for $500,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I will object to that. The law authorized $500,000 worth of property to be condemned, and we ought to appropriate the money in accordance with the law. I ask for a vote on the pending amendment.

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman is willing to have a vote on this amendment——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not willing to have a vote on the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. SISSON. I want to offer another amendment, and the language of the amendment which I have just offered as a substitute is the same as the other, except that I strike out the $500,000 in the amendment which I have offered and make it $400,000. I want to substitute for the amendment which I offered an amendment which is identical in language with the other amendment, except that $400,000 shall be in the amendment instead of $500,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment. I do not see that helps the gentleman at all.

Mr. SISSON. I trust the Chair understands what I want to do. I want to offer the amendment which I have just offered and which was ruled out on the point of order because it did not reduce expenses, substituting $400,000 instead of $500,000 in the amendment which I offered a moment ago.

Mr. MANN. Let the amendment be reported.

Mr. SISSON. I will ask that the amendment be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

Mr. MANN. An objection would stop it, but has the gentleman a right to offer the amendment? There is nothing before the House. The gentleman has offered an amendment, and let us find out what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read again the amendment for information.

Mr. SISSON. I offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has asked that the amendment be reported.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I submit this is a new amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi that has not yet been reported to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will only give the Clerk a chance he will report the amendment.

Mr. MANN. It is not a matter of reporting; it is not done by unanimous consent. I am willing to consent to waive the reading of it, as it has been read three times.

Mr. SISSON. That is what I was endeavoring to explain to the committee. The amendment I now offer is identical to the former amendment, except that $400,000 is inserted in the present amendment where $500,000 was in the amendment ruled out on the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment, and I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the reading of the amendment will be dispensed with. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman has not stated his point of order.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order it is not a reduction of anything connected with the bill; practically the same point of order that was made before applies to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the committee to what a remarkable situation the House will be in if this amendment were held to be in order.

If one gentleman could offer an amendment appropriating a certain sum of money to carry out some law, under the guise of reducing the amount carried by the bill, the gentleman could offer an amendment appropriating $1 less in that amendment and propose to change the law.

Mr. SISSON. This does not change the law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly it changes the law. It eliminates from the law certain features of it. But on the pretense that it reduces the amounts carried by the bill, it would be the easiest thing if such a ruling was made to have in order any conceivable proposition gentlemen would desire to offer to an appropriation bill. The rule is plain. It must affect the amounts carried by the bill, and pending amendments are not amounts carried by the bill under any construction that can be given.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there is a law usually called the pure-food law, and an appropriation to provide for its administrative effect. Suppose, when the deficiency bill comes before the House some gentleman offers an amendment proposing an appropriation of $150,000 for the execution of the pure-food law, and some gentleman proposes an amendment reducing the amount to $40, and an entire revision of the pure-food law, neither proposition having been considered by the committee of the House. Now, is the Chair prepared to adopt the rule that under those circumstances there can be precipitated upon the House for a vote an entire revision of the pure-food law when it has received no consideration from any committee and when there is no line in the bill reported either relating to the law or its enforcement?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill itself is yet an unaccepted proposition submitted to the House by the committee and is subject to amendment. The amendment also is an unaccepted proposition made to the House by a Member of the House; and, in this instance, by the chairman of the committee. The Chair holds this subject to amendment. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] seems, from his remarks, to be laboring under the impression that an authorization of exactly $500,000 a year is provided for under the original act. That is a mistake. The original act authorizes the expenditure of not more than $500,000 a year. If the act authorizes an expenditure of not more than $500,000 a year, an expenditure of less than $500,000 a year would be authorized by the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the rule does not say an amendment which changes the bill shall be in order, which proposes to reduce the amount in a proposed amendment. It must reduce the amount carried in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sees the hair-splitting difference there which the gentleman suggests. When there is no section in the bill on this subject, the offering of a new section by the committee is an unaccepted proposition, just the same as if it had been submitted to the House originally by the committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee has not offered any new section. The committee has offered no new provision. I offered that as a Member of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair put it in the shape of having been offered by an individual, but it was by the chairman of the committee, and the Chair is willing to strike that part of it out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the only legislation under the rule that is in order is an amendment which was reported by an individual Member of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is subject to amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know it is subject to amendment under the rules of the House. It is not subject to any amendment gentlemen may desire to make. The amendment must be in order under the rule, and the rule is what controls and not the peculiar desires of the Members of the House. The gentleman, in order to make his amendment in order, must be able to point to some rule in the House under which the amendment is in order, and not under pretense which no sane construction of the rule can hold it is in order under the rule and precipitate this House into a condition of chaos in the consideration of these bills. That is what such a ruling will do by holding such an amendment in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is in order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. SISSON. I ask that debate close on this amendment. I thought it was closed on the amendment which I offered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is closed on all the amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The question was taken, and the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now comes on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SISSON. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 17.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk return to page 103.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will turn to page 103.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 103, line 12, after the word "States," by inserting the following: "Including personal services"——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that that be passed over temporarily and that the Clerk return to page 108. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], who is interested in the matter on page 103, is not present at this moment. I ask that the Clerk turn to page 108.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the item.

Page 108, line 4:

"GOVERNMENT HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE.

"For support, clothing, and treatment in the Government Hospital for the Insane of the insane from the Army and Navy, Marine Corps, Revenue-Cutter Service, inmates of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, persons charged with or convicted of crimes against the United States who are insane, all persons who have become insane since their entry into the military and naval service of the United States who have been admitted to the hospital and who are indigent, including purchase, maintenance, and driving of necessary horses and vehicles and of horses and vehicles for official use of the superintendent, $314,400; and not exceeding $1,500 of this sum may be expended in defraying the expense of the removal of patients to their friends; not exceeding $1,000 may be expended in the purchase of such books, periodicals, and papers as may be required for the purposes of the hospital and for the medical library, and not exceeding $1,500 for actual and necessary expenses incurred in the apprehension and return to the hospital of escaped patients."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: On line 15, page 108, strike out "$314,400" and insert "$334,400."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Amend, page 108, line 15, by striking out "$314,400" and inserting "$334,400."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, a single word touching this amendment. In round numbers there are 3,000 people in the insane asylum, one-half substantially from the District of Columbia and one-half from the Army and Navy. The maintenance cost per capita in round numbers is $220 a year. It will require the amount named in the amendment to meet the requirements of the service. The amendment meets the estimate, and it meets the appropriation for the current year. I believe the appropriation should be increased as proposed by the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to call to the attention of the committee the fact that this is not a reduction of the amount for the maintenance of this institution. This item of $314,400 is not, as the gentleman assumes, a reduction in this appropriation. Twenty thousand dollars was deducted from this item, and $15,000 was added to the item for general repairs and improvements—an item which occurs a little later—and in addition a provision was inserted in the bill requiring the inclusion of the cost of repairs and certain maintenance charges in estimating the cost of maintenance of patients in the insane asylum from the District of Columbia. As a result of it the District of Columbia will pay the full cost of maintaining the patients from the District, and that burden will be taken off the United States. We have simply, by a readjustment of these items, given the estimate practically.

Mr. CANNON. Let me understand the gentleman. The gentleman states that elsewhere in the bill, if it is agreed to, by succeeding items the amounts recommended in the bill will be sufficient, substantially, to care for 3,000 patients.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. I understand the gentleman's amendment increases this amount by $20,000?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee deducted $20,000 from this item, and it added $15,000 to the item for general repairs and improvements, on page 109, because about that sum was paid out of the other item. Then, the committee inserted a provision to compel the payment by the District of Columbia of that portion of the general repairs and improvements which properly would be prorated to the District patients.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand the gentleman, his explanation is a satisfactory one, namely, that, taking the provisions all together, if agreed to by the House, the provision here, with the other items and provisions touching the insane asylum, will substantially care for 3,000 patients, which is the estimate of the number that there will be, at $220 a year each.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not 3,000.

Mr. CANNON. Well, substantially that. In other words, there is no cut in the bill for maintenance?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is a reduction of only $5,000 in these items from the current law.

Mr. CANNON. And that reduction is cared for elsewhere.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We believe that that will be cared for by this provision which requires the payment by the District of its proportionate share.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To reimburse the United States the amount due on account of one-half of the per capita cost of maintenance of indigent patients in the Government Hospital for the Insane from the District of Columbia in excess of the number charged to and paid for by said District during the fiscal years 1881 to 1911, inclusive, there shall be transferred from the revenues of the District of Columbia to the United States, beginning with the fiscal year 1913, the sum of $769,536.09 in seven equal annual installments, which amounts so transferred shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think in its present shape it is subject to a point of order. There is only one phase of it, however, that I think is subject to a point of order, and that is the requirement that the money be paid in seven annual installments. If that should be sustained I propose to offer an amendment so that it will be paid in one installment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Insert, after line 2, page 109, the following:

"To reimburse the United States the amount due on account of one-half of the per capita cost of maintenance of indigent patients in the Government Hospital for the Insane from the District of Columbia in excess of the number charged to and paid for by said District during the fiscal years 1881 to 1911, inclusive, there shall be transferred from the revenues of the District of Columbia to the United States, beginning with the fiscal year 1913, the sum of $769,536.09, which amounts so transferred shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the point of order of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MANN. It is not in order in this bill to make such a provision even if authorized by law. This is not the bill providing for appropriations for the District of Columbia. This item, if in order at all, would be in order on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

In the second place, there is no authorization in law for the transfer or making this appropriation. Of course, the transfer could only be considered in order in any event as an appropriation, and there is no authorization in law for this appropriation.

As to whether there has been an excess charge or a lack of charge is a matter which requires legislation, and the committee having jurisdiction of the legislation for the District of Columbia is the Committee on the District of Columbia.

This proposes to acquire in this bill an appropriation of over $700,000 from the District revenues to be paid to the United States Treasury on a claim which the United States Treasury may have against the District. No one is prepared to know what the law is on the subject, or whether there is any law, and the gentleman can not base an appropriation upon the claim merely that the District of Columbia has not paid its proportional share. It requires legislation to accomplish the purpose, and that legislation should come from the proper committee.

Here is the situation: This House has already authorized the District Committee to make an investigation of the books of the District. That committee is engaged in making such investigation. We originally appropriated a certain amount of money out of the contingent fund for that purpose, and we have recently added to the amount which may be expended for that purpose. When the District Committee reports it has a right to report recommending that certain action be taken. But until that is had it is not within the province of the Committee on Appropriations in the sundry civil bill to go back for all time and undertake to determine for themselves whether the Government owes the District or whether the District owes the Government for matters which have taken place in the past. This is not an appropriation for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, or anything in relation to it. I do not desire to consume very much time in arguing points of order or otherwise, because I hope that we can get along with this bill and get through with it. To me it is perfectly clear that it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I can not agree with the gentleman. In the first place there is nothing in the rule which requires the Committee on Appropriations to report in any particular bill appropriations over which it has jurisdiction. In the second place it is well established that the committee can report in any bill over which it has jurisdiction for deficiencies in any service over which it has jurisdiction. Under the law the District of Columbia is authorized to send certain classes of insane to the Government Hospital for the Insane. Appropriations have been made from time to time to cover the cost of maintaining these District insane and investigation has disclosed that in a number of instances the District has not paid the full amount it should have paid for maintaining the insane properly chargeable to it. I have seen some statements of the auditor showing the balances due from the District to the United States for certain years. The books in the Government Hospital for the Insane disclosed that the District is indebted to the United States for the amount named in this amendment for care of the insane.

This provision merely proposes to appropriate from the revenues of the District a sufficient sum to meet a deficiency which now exists in the appropriations heretofore made for the care of the insane of the District in the Government Hospital for the Insane. This item supplies deficiencies in the appropriations heretofore made for that purpose during the period indicated in the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. In 1857 the first provision was made that District lunatics might be put into this asylum. That arrangement went along until 1876, when by another act of Congress, which is to be found in volume 19 of the United States Statutes at Large, page 108, a law was enacted to the effect that the District of Columbia should pay one-half of the expenses of the indigent persons who might be thereafter admitted from the District of Columbia into the Hospital for the Insane.

The next act bearing upon the subject is that which is commonly called in the District of of Columbia the "organic act," the act of June 11, 1878, in which the half-and-half plan is contained. If there was any obligation imposed upon the Federal Government by the act of June 11, 1878, it was repealed by the act which is to be found in volume 20 of the United States Statutes at Large, at page 230, of date June 20, 1878, which reads as follows:

That one-half of the expense of the indigent persons who may be admitted from the District of Columbia shall be reported to the Treasury Department, and charged against the appropriations to be paid toward the expenses of the District by the General Government.

That is a direct piece of legislation, that one-half of the expenses on account of the indigent insane from the District of Columbia shall be paid by the District of Columbia and charged against the appropriations toward the expenses of the District of Columbia by the General Government. The question now arises, first, as to whether or not that has been done, and, next, if it has not been done, can it be done now in this bill and in this way? The gentleman from Illiñois [Mr. MANN] has just stated that this paragraph is not in the proper bill. There are numerous precedents where everybody who has been called upon to rule upon this question has held that appropriations concerning the District of Columbia may be contained in any of the general appropriation bills, and it is all the time practiced.

The next question that arises is this: Has this fund been converted into the Treasury as directed by the statute of May 20, 1878, a section of which the Chair just read? The Comptroller of the Treasury has decided upon numerous instances that that has not been done. The Chair now has in hand a communication which reads as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., November 16, 1882.

GENTLEMEN: An account between the United States and the District of Columbia for expenses of indigent insane District patients in the Government Hospital for the Insane during the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1879, has been settled per first auditor's report, No. 229391, as certified by this office, and there has been found to be due the United States the sum of $4,300.10, as is shown by the inclosed statement.

Very respectfully,

W. LAWRENCE, First Comptroller.

This was addressed to the Hon. Joseph R. West, T. P. Morgan, and Maj. Garrett J. Lydecker, Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Another ruling and also certification made by the Comptroller of the Treasury is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., March 23, 1883.

GENTLEMEN: An account between the United States and the District of Columbia for expenses of indigent insane District patients in the Government Hospital for the Insane during the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1880, has been settled per first auditor's report, No. 229411, as certified by this office, and there has been found to be due the United States the sum of $27,490.98, as is shown by the inclosed statement.

Very respectfully,

W. LAWRENCE, First Comptroller,
By JOS. AD THOMSON,
Acting Deputy First Comptroller.

This was addressed to Hon. Joseph R. West, James B. Edmonds, and Maj. G. J. Lydecker, Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Another ruling made by the Comptroller of the Treasury, and so certified by him, is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 18, 1884.

GENTLEMEN: An account between the United States and the District of Columbia for expenses of indigent insane District patients in the Government Hospital for the Insane during the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1881, has been settled, per First Auditor's report No. 229498, as certified by this office, and there has been found to be due the United States the sum of $24,678.25, as is shown by the inclosed statement.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM LAWRENCE,
First Comptroller,
By J. TARBELL,
Deputy First Comptroller.

That was also addressed to Hon. Thomas B. Edmonds, Joseph R. West, and Maj. Garrett J. Lydecker, Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

A further photographic reproduction of a statement from the accounts, as kept by the Treasury of the United States, which the Chair has before him, shows that those certifications continued until 1888, during all of which time, except during the first two years, they were absolutely ignored by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and not one cent was paid to the Federal Government by the District of Columbia, as was certified by the Comptroller of the Treasury to those commissioners.

The law not having been complied with, as set out in the act of June 20, 1878, which reads as follows:

* * * and charged against the appropriations to be paid toward the expenses of the District by the General Government—

the Chair, upon mature consideration of the matter, is of the opinion that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is not such legislation as is forbidden by the rule. It is what might be termed "congressional dictum"; or, as the District Commissioners in a communication to the President have denominated, "legislative direction," to the executive officers of the United States to do that which they should have done without this direction.

The law already directs that these transfers shall be made upon tne accounts between the District of Columbia and the Federal Government. This paragraph is not, therefore, new. That law has been ignored, notwithstanding the fact that the Comptroller of the Treasury has repeatedly called the attention of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to it, and they have failed and refused thus far to comply either with the law or with the direction of the Comptroller of the Treasury as he has construed the law.

The Chair is, as said, of the opinion that this is not new legislation, because no change in the law is made hereby. It is simply a congressional direction to the executive officers to do that which they should have done without it. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have not yet learned the distinction between legislation and a legislative direction to the administrative officers of the Government. The Chair has ruled the item in order. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether that committee or the subcommittee preparing the sundry civil appropriation bill, or the subcommittee that has jurisdiction over appropriations for the District of Columbia, heard anybody representing the District with reference to this item?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It did not; but I call——

Mr. MANN. That is a sufficient answer.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That hardly answers the question.

Mr. MANN. That answers my question, but I am quite willing that the gentleman should extend his answer.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does not give the gentleman all of the information to which he is entitled. Later, when the committee was at work upon the general deficiency appropriation bill, the auditor for the District of Columbia called attention to this provision, and I gave the auditor a copy of the testimony before the committee and suggested that he examine it and furnish any statement he thought proper to the committee.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, here is a proposition which the Chair has ruled in order as a legislative direction to the administrative officers to go back and take money out of the District since 1881 on old claims. I do not know the merits of the proposition, but no committee of the House that has jurisdiction of the subject has had any hearings upon the subject at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction.

Mr. MANN. The subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having jurisdiction over the District of Columbia appropriations has had no hearings, the gentleman states. The subcommittee representing the sundry civil appropriation bill, which has no jurisdiction over District of Columbia matters, has had hearings. The Committee on the District of Columbia has had no hearings. I would not hang a dog upon such evidence, much less endeavor to take nearly $800,000 out of the treasury of the people of the District of Columbia without a hearing, without giving the District Commissioners a chance to be heard. I have not discussed the matter with anyone. I noticed in the newspapers some things in regard to it, and the gentleman says they have had no one representing the District before his committee upon this proposition. Yet it is proposed, without a hearing on a matter that is in controversy at the best, that Congress shall do what the Chairman describes as a sort of dictum, namely, determine the matter regardless of law, regardless of the decision of the accounting officers, and require that there be taken out of the revenues paid by the District people this sum of money, to be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

There ought to be a settlement if there is a controversy, and it ought to be settled by the proper officers. If the District owes the United States, the amount ought to be paid; if perchance the Government owes the District, the amount ought to be paid, but it should not be paid when there is a controverted question of accounting.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there is no controverted question of accounting.

Mr. MANN. I say there is. I have often heard lawyers say there is no controversy in a case, but that is the opinion of the gentleman as to whether there is a controversy, and I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not say what the gentleman said; I am making my own statement.

Mr. MANN. That is the opinion of the gentleman, that there is no controversy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I say there is no conflict in the question of accounting. Under the law the District is entitled to send certain insane patients to the Government Hospital for the Insane. The books of the Government Hospital for the Insane show that for 25 years the District has failed to pay for the patients sent there under the law. There is no question of accounting; it is a matter of fact; and the facts appear of record, and all the testimony that the District Commissioners would give from now to the end of the year can not change the facts, because the records are not in their possession. The Superintendent for the Government Hospital for the Insane has been endeavoring to compel the District to pay what is due. This year he finally compelled them to pay, and also last year, because of the ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury that the District could no longer shirk its duty in this respect. The Committee on Appropriations, whenever it finds a situation so simple, when an application to the records shows clearly that the District is indebted to the General Government, that it has been enjoying the benefits of the Federal Treasury improperly, does not need to search out gentlemen who may desire to make statements not based upon the facts or statements based upon other things than the facts in order to reach a conclusion. From the books of the insane asylum, which show the amount that the District failed to pay for the maintenance of patients properly chargeable to the District, the committee acted.

The Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction of this matter, and the inquiry having been made regarding the appropriations made out of the Federal Treasury for the support of the insane properly chargeable to the Federal Treasury found that part of that money was being taken for the support of the patients that should have been supported out of the District treasury. It did the only thing that could be done; that is, to recommend a provision that would appropriate from the revenues of the District the amount it had failed to pay for the care of patients properly chargeable to it in the past. I think the District should pay it, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 33, noes 11.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For roadways, grading, and walks, $5,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 109, after line 18, insert "for cement wall about Howard Hall and shop and storehouse building, $55,209."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the superintendent of the insane asylum was heard touching this item. This is one of the estimates made and formally transmitted. We have just enacted a provision that gives credit to the Federal Treasury for three-quarters of a million dollars, in round numbers, that the District, under the law, owes to the United States. The money is in the Treasury to comply with that direction from the District revenues, as I understand it. Now, they are pretty badly off over there at the insane asylum for many improvements, and as the District contributes its half, there is a much less sum that comes into the Federal Treasury, or something less, required to put that institution into good shape and proper shape so that humane and safe treatment may be given not only to those who are entitled to admission from the Army and Navy and for insane indigent soldiers of the Civil War, but also to give proper care to the insane of the District of Columbia. This is one of several amendments I propose to offer. I read the note on which this estimate is transmitted:

For cement wall about Howard Hall and shop and storehouse building, $55,209.

And I crave the attention of members of the committee to this fact.

NOTE.—This item is in lieu of a previously requested appropriation of $160,000 for a new building for the criminal insane, and is based upon the recommendation of a special committee which has spent considerable time in studying the accommodations for the criminal insane and the problem of their future care at the hospital. The present building has never been altogether safe for such a dangerous class of patients, and although its safety has recently been increased by remodeling the window guards, still it is considered that further safeguard should be taken. It seems most feasible to construct a cement wall 24 feet in height about the building at a considerable distance. This will not only render escape from the building practically impossible, but will give a much-needed outside courtyard for exercise. The construction of a shop and storehouse building is made necessary in connection with this proposed wall for the reason that the basement of Howard Hall is at present used as a shop and storehouse, and if a wall were constructed about the building the use of the basement for these purposes would have to be abandoned, and, as there is no other available place to which to move, the construction of a separate building is rendered necessary.

This estimate has been presented in accordance with the special report made by the special committee appointed by the Secretary of the Interior for the purpose of making an inquiry into the needs of the Government Hospital for the Insane, and for outlining the future policy of its growth. It is believed to be essential as a matter of public safety so long as the criminal insane are maintained at the institution.

I will not take the time to read from the hearings the statement of Dr. White touching this matter. It is fuller than the note which has been read. The criminal insane are dangerous to themselves, are dangerous to each other, are dangerous to the people that are not in the insane asylum. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the estimates recommending a number of the improvements were withdrawn when Dr. White was before the committee. This particular item was for $55,209, for the purpose of building a cement wall around one building and erecting a workshop outside of the wall. The committee, in view of all the facts before it, did not feel justified in recommending the appropriation. A number of these recommendations were of such a character that the committee did not feel that it could properly recommend the appropriations of the amounts requested for the purpose asked. For instance, there was a request for $65,000 to build a barn to accommodate 200 cows and some hogs. Even those members of the committee who are not engaged in agricultural pursuits were rather astonished at the request, and it was modified by having the $65,000 item withdrawn and an appropriation of $50,000 substituted instead. Even that sum appeared to members of the committee, who were quite familiar with the management of farm animals and accommodations for them, as being excessive to accommodate 200 cows and the number of hogs that were there. These estimates were undoubtedly made in the same way. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] called attention to the fact that in the annual report of the superintendent the recommendation was made for a residence to cost $40,000 for the superintendent of the asylum. These various recommendations seemed to the committee to be on such a scale that they could not be justified, and they did not recommend any of the estimates that were placed upon such a plane. There are ample accommodations for the insane of the District and the Government at the present institution.

A suggestion was made that some additional land should be purchased, but it is very doubtful whether it is advisable to acquire additional land for the present institution, or if it be necessary to accommodate a much larger number of insane, to remove them some place else where land will be much more reasonable and where accommodations can be more economically provided. This institution at present has about 3,000 insane. That seems to be about as large a number as could be accommodated in one institution. The committee did not believe it desirable to enlarge it. Some of the recommendations which the gentleman intimates he will offer to the committee in the form of an amendment were not considered and recommended because of the conviction that they could not be justified on the information in the possession of the committee.

I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to call attention to the reply that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has made in opposing this amendment. I did not take time to read the statement of Dr. White, which is much fuller than the note that was submitted with the estimate, and is to be found in the hearings. There was a board appointed by the Secretary of the Interior to consider the condition of St. Elizabeth Insane Hospital. It consisted of George H. Torney, Surgeon General of the Army of the United States; A. W. Dunbar, surgeon of the United States Navy, representing the Secretary of the Navy; Robert V. La Dow, superintendent of prisons, representing the Attorney General; William V. Judson, engineer, United States Army, representing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; and Dr. William A. White, superintendent of the Government Hospital, representing the Secretary of the Interior. This report made to the Secretary of the Interior and transmitted by message from the President covers some 37 pages. It is a very interesting report and shows the absolute necessity not only for this appropriation but for many other appropriations.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. BOWMAN. Do I understand that there is no proper protection so that the inmates of this home now can have outdoor exercise?

Mr. CANNON. There is no proper protection for the criminal insane to prevent their escape, and it is proposed to build a wall about the building in which they are confined and give a little place for outdoor exercise; and not only for exercise, but principally for the protection of the public and for the protection of the 2,500 other patients that are at St. Elizabeth. My friend from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is one of the most astute Members of the House in defense of his bill. He says there was an estimate of an appropriation for additional land. I will offer that amendment presently. He also says there was an estimate of an appropriation for a house for the superintendent to live in, and that there was an estimate for an appropriation submitted for the building of a barn, and so on, and so on; and that the committee anticipated that at some time or other there may be an additional insane asylum constructed. I have heard that for 25 years. There has not been and will not be, in my judgment, an additional asylum. So that, not talking gravely about the necessity of this appropriation, the gentleman says, "Oh, well, we considered these propositions and did not give any of them."

Mr. Chairman, I am ready for a vote.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, little things are very indicative at times of the temper and capacity of men making recommendations, and when a committee appointed to investigate this hospital for the insane make a recommendation as a serious proposition to spend $40,000 for a superintendent's house they have to do a good deal to convince me that they are safe people to follow.

I think a recommendation of that kind is so wantonly extravagant and inexcusable as to show on the part of the men making it a total lack of appreciation of the needs of an institution and of the policy that the Government should follow in connection with one; and they did make that recommendation, as will be found upon an examination of page 27 of the report of the Government Hospital for the Insane.

Now, that is simply in keeping with a great many other recommendations that have been made in connection with this institution. I do not agree at all with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that it is nonsense to talk about an additional insane asylum. I believe that we have reached, if we have not already passed, the proper point of size for a Government insane asylum, and if we are to go on enlarging this institution, which is now right at the edge of the town, and buy property practically at city prices, in order there to confine in one institution all the insane of the country, it does not strike me as either in the line of good administration or economy or common sense.

Nor is it true in any correct sense of the word that this improvement is necessary in order to make safe the confinement of the criminal insane, and the hearings do not bear out that statement. It is stated and alleged that it will make their confinement safer. But there were none of us who were familiar with the conditions who felt that it was necessary to spend this money in order to insure the safety of those patients. And I repeat that the recommendations that have come from time to time touching the Government Hospital for the Insane have led me to believe that there is a total lack of appreciation on the part of those who are managing the concern of the limitations that should be put upon such an institution.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. BOWMAN. Do I understand the gentleman to say that there is an opportunity now for the criminal insane to have adequate out-door exercise?

Mr. SHERLEY. I did not say that; but I do believe there are facilities now. I did say that this was not necessary to prevent the escape of the criminal insane, and I will now read the statement of Dr. White, who put, to say the least, the most favorable construction possible upon conditions in order to back up these estimates of his. He says:

> Dr. WHITE. Howard Hall is the building in which the insane criminals are confined. The object of this cement wall is to increase the safety of caring for that class of people. We have had in the past year in that building some of the most dangerous men in the United States, and we have spent several thousand dollars in making that building as secure as we can, but it is still an insecure building. It was built a good many years ago, and one of the very material elements of insecurity is the presence of something like 300 windows right outside, without any protection from anybody getting things into the building through the windows, except by having watchmen to patrol the grounds. The object of the wall, therefore, is to prevent access to the building by evil-minded people who may pass in weapons, for example.

Now, it ought to be stated in that connection that there has been a remodeling of the windows, whereby they are protected by iron gratings. If, on that statement, it could be said that there is any great danger of the criminal insane escaping, then I fail to properly weigh language.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> On page 109, after line 18, insert:
> "To enable the Secretary of the Interior to purchase additional land for the Government Hospital for the Insane, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.
> "In the event of his inability to make such purchase, the Secretary of the Interior shall proceed in the manner prescribed for providing a site for the Government Printing Office, in so much of the act of July 1, 1898, as is set forth on pages 648 and 649 of volume 30 of the Statutes at Large, to acquire the land desired; and for the purpose of such acquisition the Secretary of the Interior shall have and exercise all the power conferred upon the Public Printer in such act; the appropriation to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I shall not take much time in calling the attention of the committee to this or other amendments that I may offer. It is perfectly patent that however meritorious the amendment may be, in my judgment, from my standpoint, the majority of the committee, under the leadership of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, constituted as it is, will vote down each one of them. I voted for the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York reimbursing the United States for three-quarters of a million dollars that the District owed it for the care of the District insane; and in the future I apprehend that they will have to pay the amount that the law requires them to pay.

I think that that legislation was apt; but what right have we, in caring for our own people, caring for the insane of the Army and the Navy and the indigent insane, the soldiers of the Civil War—what right have we to fail to provide for them while we collect from the District of Columbia for the care of their insane the full price and to make them reimburse the Government by three-quarters of a million dollars, two-thirds of which, if appropriated, and all of which, if appropriated, would buy this land and make the insane asylum what humanity requires it to be?

Now a word as to the merits of this amendment. The note in the estimate says:

NOTE.—The need of additional land by the hospital has been appreciated for some time, and each superintendent for many years past has requested appropriations for its purchase. The need of land has become more acute of late because all of the new construction has been placed upon land previously used for farming purposes, thus restricting the output of the farm to such an extent that it is now impossible to raise enough fodder for the dairy herd. The hospital is increasing in size at the rate of upward of 100 patients per annum and more buildings must be added in the near future, which will still further infringe upon the land used for farming.

NOTE.—The need of additional land is recognized by the special committee appointed to inquire into the needs and future policy of the hospital, and its purchase has been recommended in the committee's report.

Some years ago it was necessary to make some provision for a considerable enlargement of this insane hospital. There was a proposition to buy some land adjoining it on the South. That proposition failed. Buildings were provided, and they crossed the road for the erection of the educational buildings. Now, I have no doubt in my own mind, from what knowledge I have been able to obtain, that this amendment ought to be agreed to and the additional land obtained. For one I am not willing to postpone action upon the statement that as the city extends the land becomes more valuable. That is true, and now is the best time to obtain that land. Nobody believes, in my judgment, that this large expenditure at this great plant at the insane asylum ever will be abandoned, and it can be more economically administered by the purchase of the additional land now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, many years ago, when the gentleman from Illinois was the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, a proposition was made to buy additional land and erect additional buildings for this institution. Congress authorized the erection of the buildings at a cost to the United States of a million dollars or more, but declined to buy the land. Ever since that time it is my recollection that there has been an attempt made to obtain additional land. The Governmental Hospital for the Insane has about 800 acres of land at present, over 357 of them are devoted to agricultural purposes. The land that it is proposed to purchase at present is of very little value for agricultural purposes. The superintendent does not know how much it will cost, and he does not believe that it can be obtained for less than $500 an acre, and in his opinion it would not be worth $500 an acre for agricultural purposes.

So the only reason for buying this land would be to hold it and to hope that at some future time it might be utilized for the construction of buildings thereon. The tract in contemplation is a tract of about 150 acres, for which it is desired to appropriate $100,000. It would be much better, if additional land is needed, to buy a farm some place out in the country for the benefit of this institution, to remove the herd and the raising of the crops for the benefit of the institution from the vicinity of the institution to farm land that could be purchased within a reasonable distance of the institution at farm-land prices. The committee could not justify the expenditure of $100,000 to purchase 150 acres of land that is of very little value for agricultural purposes and as to which there is no prospect of buildings being erected thereon. Under the circumstances, I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the Government own some land over there that is operated in connection with the asylum which is detached from this land?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does. They have a place some miles from the asylum.

Mr. FOSTER. If we are going to buy land over there for the purpose of farming, is it not the gentleman's idea that we better buy it out there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; out where farms are and not in the city. There are over 300 acres that can be utilized for buildings.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman offer an amendment to buy the farm land that is detached.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, I do not know anything about the matter.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from New York offer such an amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. For what?

Mr. FOSTER. To buy the farm land over there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I shall not. Mr. Chairman, there is one thing else I wish to say. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] seems to be petulant if this side of the House will not vote for amendments which he offers. He should not complain. We remember the gentleman from Illinois as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. It was a very sad day for anybody on this side of the House to presume to offer an amendment to any bill of which he had charge. These matters have been thrashed out in the committee. Members of the committee have reached their conclusions upon them. The gentleman does not bring in any additional information. It is not to be expected that we should be of such shifting minds that one day we would be of one mind and another day another. The gentleman should be content to let this side of the House assume and bear the responsibility for the legislation which it is enacting.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making a single observation. I am quite aware that the majority of the House and the committee at this time will settle these appropriations. The gentleman says that I am petulant. Nay, nay; I am only earnest. I am going to stop right now after this amendment is disposed of. I apprehend, without being a prophet or the son of a prophet, that the majority will withhold the appropriation covered by the amendment which I have offered.

There are many other amendments that ought to be offered, but what good would it do? It is my judgment, and as a member of the minority and from the standpoint of humanity I feel that I ought to call the attention of the committee to the necessity for improvements at St. Elizabeths Insane Asylum, and in most perfect good humor after you have voted down my amendment I am going to subside as quietly as possible, and hope that some time in the future, if you should be continued in power, you will take better care of those unfortunates than you are now doing; and if we should be so fortunate as to be returned to power I shall appeal with the same earnestness to the majority side of the House for this and similar appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to remind the gentleman from Illinois that in the Sixtieth Congress he appointed a very excellent committee of this House to investigate the insane asylum. That committee made a report and did not recommend, among other things, the purchase of this land. In all the years that I have been in the House this same recommendation has been made to Republican Congresses, and they have steadily refused to purchase this land.

I have never heard any criticism that the insane were to suffer because of the failure to acquire the land. I do not believe there is any danger of suffering if we do not at this time buy it. The acquisition of this land determines a policy. It would mean that it was the intention of Congress to very greatly increase the present institution. I am one of those who believe that as additional facilities are needed it would be better to provide them in a separate institution. An institution with 3,000 inmates is about as large an institution as it is wise to have under the control of one man in order to have proper and efficient management. That is one of the reasons I do not believe it desirable to buy this land.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 14, noes 35.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I shall withhold the offering of sundry other amendments touching the insane asylum simply because I do not care to consume the time of the committee in offering what seem to be necessary amendments and in having them voted down.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fuel and light, in part payment for fuel and light, Freedmen's Hospital and Howard University, including necessary labor to care for and operate the same, $3,500.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"For dormitory for men, $150,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, on that I make the point of order. It is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. How is it subject to the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. For the same reason that the item included in this bill for a science hall for Howard University was subject to a point of order three or four years ago. It was held that it was not authorized by law. This is not authorized by law. It is not Government property, as I recall, and there is no authority for this building.

Mr. CANNON. I do not recollect the item to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I recollect, because I helped to get the building authorized in a different way. There was a provision in the bill for a hall of science to cost $90,000, and it was taken out on a point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman be kind enough to indicate to me the way?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Nay, nay. [Laughter.]

Mr. KAHN. I suspect he went over to the Senate and got the amendment offered there. Am I correct in my surmise?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We got it in the House.

Mr. CANNON. Notwithstanding a point of order was made to it and sustained?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. It was through a little ingenuity.

Mr. CANNON. Did the gentleman appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; we put it in in a different way, with the assistance of gentlemen upon the other side.

Mr. CANNON. Then, by the gentleman's solitary cuteness, he avoided the rules of the House and got a desirable appropriation that was not in order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman knows that sometimes things can be done by a little skill and preparation.

Mr. CANNON. Possibly so; but I know of no way, if this amendment is not in order, which will enable me to avoid the rules of the House and still get the appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Neither do I. I do not think there is any way by which the gentleman can get this put in the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, upon the point of order: Freedmen's Hospital has been cared for for almost a generation. It has grown. It is a public work.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not Government property. This is not to erect a building on Government property. It is not authorized by law. So, therefore, the amendment is not in order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman by what authority the appropriation for maintenance is made, for tools and materials, for the medical department, and so forth? Is all that unauthorized by law and is all that going on by unanimous consent? Are the expenditures placed under the Interior Department and audited without law?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have never been able to find any statute for it. Has the gentleman from Illinois? He knows these appropriations are gratuities. The Federal Government has been appropriating these sums for the aid of Howard University year by year without objection on the part of anybody, but there is no authority to be found in any statute for it.

Mr. CANNON. And yet are they not under the control of the Government?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the Secretary of the Interior is on the board of trustees, and I think he has some control over expenditures, but I do not recall the statute.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman has sitting at his side the very efficient clerk of the committee. Will the gentleman inquire of the clerk of the committee whatever of legislation, if there is any, touching this matter and inform me?

Mr. SHERLEY. This is one of the occasions when Jupiter nods. The clerk does not know, and it is the only time I have ever struck him when he did not, but it is a fact.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is a corporation incorporated under an act of Congress. My recollection is the Secretary of the Interior is on the board of trustees and exercises a certain control over these expenditures.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely, and the expenditures are made by the Government, under the supervision of the Government, supported by the Government in large part, and have been from the commencement. There is an endowment fund, and every dollar that is expended is——

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has a very slight endowment fund. There is some money obtained from students.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, the endowment fund is larger than the gentleman seems to intimate. He says it is very slight. My recollection is—I have the report here somewhere—that the income is from charges to students and endowment, probably one-third of the cost. I am ready for a ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is waiting upon the gentleman from Illinois, and thought he intended continuing his remarks. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. CANNON. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The precedents are unbroken that even upon Government property new buildings have to be authorized. There is no authorization for this building; it is not on Government property, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. If the Chair will allow me, I do not think the precedents are such as the Chair says. I think, too, at any of the institutions controlled by the Government you do not have to have an authorization for every building that is constructed. However, let it go.

Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 110, after line 23, insert "for assembly hall for university uses, $75,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, how far has the Clerk read?

The CHAIRMAN. Down to and including line 23 at the bottom of page 110.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, the Howard University has had a very remarkable growth in the last decade under very efficient superintendence. I do not know of an institution that has had a better growth. In round numbers there are 1,500 or 1,600 students. It is the only institution, so far as I know, substantially set apart and devoted to the consideration of those of the colored race who desire knowledge in medicine and surgery, in agriculture, in law, chemistry, physics, manual training, and especially in training of students as teachers, so necessary for the oncoming generations even of white people. More and more substantially the colored citizens of the United States are excluded, if not by law by practice, from universities and colleges of the country. I believe that the maintenance of Howard University should keep step in efficiency with the increase of students, and with accommodations for the rapidly increasing number of students.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. BOWMAN. On page 1412, part 2 of the hearings, Dr. Thirkield states, in answer to a question of the chairman:

The CHAIRMAN. Just state the necessity for the dormitory.

Dr. THIRKIELD. There has been no increase in dormitory accommodations since the original buildings were erected, over 40 years ago. Of the nearly 1,500 students in attendance, four-fifths of whom are men, only one in five can be accommodated in present dormitories. It is unfortunate that the young men who are in training as the intellectual, moral, religious, and industrial leaders of their race are thus forced out into the miscellaneous lodging places of the city, and are not kept under the direct supervision, control, and uplifting influence of the dormitory life of the institution. The men's dormitory that was built for 125 men has in it more than 200 men.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; and much more of the same kind.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman permit? There is hardly a college in America, certainly none I know of, where students are confined within the college boundaries. I attended the University of Virginia, one of the great universities of America, and it is not true there and it is not true of the great colleges of which I know, and how you can say that negro students attending Howard University are going to be injured by living in the city of Washington rather than living in the university grounds passes my understanding.

Mr. CANNON. There is greater demand for accommodations in the dormitories and those accommodations are paid for by the students. The bare statement of the location of this institution and the statement of the late superintendent, Dr. Thirkield—who, I very much regret, leaves this work for other work—show the propriety, aye more, the necessity, for appropriating as recommended in the estimates.

Even in such an institution for white people the dormitories are desirable. If they are builded, they are self-supporting and paid for by the students. It seems to me, for reasons assigned, that the dormitories are desirable. Now, then, this whole matter is larger than the expenditure of a few thousand dollars or many thousand dollars. I do not seek to criticize anybody anywhere for the condition touching our colored American citizens. I think, everything considered, they have made marvelous progress. That great institution in Alabama is doing good work, as I am informed and believe, under the leadership of Booker T. Washington, but this institution for the training of teachers and instruction in agriculture, and otherwise, is a practical training which they receive, and surely, surely, it ought to be liberally supported.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman yield once more?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. BOWMAN. I see on page 1404 of these hearings that the amount of income received from students, for fees and rent of dormitories, and so on, was $47,781.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest to the gentleman that for 16 years they have had these dormitories, and during all that time the gentleman from Illinois has never agitated himself about it. I have stood here and fought for this institution and am just as friendly to it as anybody in the House. Nobody was convinced that there was any pressing necessity at this time for these two buildings. We have been liberal in the appropriations for the support of the institution. That is all we should be. There is no necessity for attempting to place anybody improperly before the country in connection with these items.

Mr. CANNON. I am not seeking to place anybody improperly before the country, but with the doubling up of the membership of this institution I say there has been no adequate appropriation made for their accommodation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The necessity has not arisen this year, and the gentleman has not advocated the increased accommodations during the past 16 years during which his own party has been in power.

Mr. CANNON. The manner in which these students strive to make themselves competent to be of assistance to their race should be encouraged by liberal appropriations to maintain this institution.

The Clerk read as follows:

For furniture and furnishings, including awnings and screens, and other necessary articles for the proper equipment of the nurses' home authorized by sundry civil act approved March 4, 1911, $6,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 111, after line 15, insert the following:
"For repairs and painting hospital buildings, $5,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the hearings show the necessity for the repairs and for the amount of money indicated. I am ready for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to the fact that this bill carries $5,000 of an item out of which repairs can be made.

Mr. CANNON. That does not care for these special repairs.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It cares for the repairs. The reason they asked for this $5,000 was that they had no specific appropriation, and the committee increased the item under which repairs may be made from $21,000 to $26,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. I also offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 111, after line 15, by inserting:
"For furniture and furnishings, including awnings and screens, and other necessary articles for the proper equipment of the nurses' home authorized by the sundry civil act approved March 4, 1911, $6,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that that provision is in the bill, and that he is offering it again as an amendment to the provision.

Mr. CANNON. I compliment the gentleman on the fact that the provision is in the bill. The gentleman has my cordial approval for having inserted it in the bill. I withdraw the amendment, and offer another amendment. I am glad to have an opportunity to commend my friend from New York touching this item.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will report the new amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 111, after line 15, by inserting:
"For the purchase of an electric ambulance, $3,500."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CANNON. Upon what ground?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not authorized. There is no authority to purchase it.

Mr. CANNON. The Government owns this hospital, does it not? The Government owning the hospital, does the gentleman say that this provision for an ambulance that is necessary is subject to a point of order? I ask the gentleman that question.

Mr. HAY. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the Chair has already ruled.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled, but we will hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. Does not the Chair understand that this ambulance is necessary for the moving of patients and necessary to carry on this hospital? Does the Chair hold that it requires a special act of Congress providing "Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, so much for the purchase of an ambulance"?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman, and am willing to have a vote on the item.

Mr. CANNON. The point of order is not well taken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the Chair held that it was. The gentleman is not the czar now that he used to be.

Mr. CANNON. No; I am not the czar, but I am a Member of the House, and I challenge the decision.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman need not criticize the decision of the Chair. The gentleman can move an appeal.

Mr. CANNON. I would move an appeal from the decision of the Chair, but I notice the gentleman withdraws the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I withdraw the point of order. We do not want to have a controversy in the matter.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think you want to establish a precedent of that kind.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We will, if it is necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the point of order has been made against automobiles and automobile ambulances, and things like that, a great many times in the House, and every time that the question has been raised the point has always been sustained. The point of order has again been sustained. By unanimous consent, and by unanimous consent only, will the status be changed.

Mr. MANN. If the Chair will permit, I wish to say a word. The Chair has made that statement. The point of purchasing an ambulance was directly ruled upon in the Army appropriation bill a few years ago, when it was held that it was in order to provide for the purchase of an ambulance or an automobile, there being authority for a conveyance.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not certain that there is authority for a conveyance.

The CHAIRMAN. Is objection heard to the request of the gentleman from New York that the point of order be withdrawn? No objection is heard, and the point of order is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. The necessity for this amendment, Mr. Chairman, is fully explained in the hearings. I shall not take time to read them. It is absolutely useless to do it, but I will take five minutes of time to speak of the work of this hospital.

Patients admitted to the hospital are classed under two heads—United States and District of Columbia. Those from the District of Columbia are received under a contract with the Board of Charities at the following rates: Adults, $1.10; children, 65 cents; and babies, 40 cents per day.

At the close of the preceding year there remained 154 patients—87 from the District of Columbia and 67 from the States. Two thousand four hundred and ninety-eight were received during the year, and 248 births occurred in the hospital, making a total of 2,900 indoor patients treated, as against 2,869 the previous year. Of those under care, 1,882 were residents of the District of Columbia and 1,018 were from the States. Two thousand seven hundred and twenty-four were discharged during the year, their conditions being as follows: Recovered, 1,416; improved, 919; unimproved, 138; not treated, 17; died, 234; leaving 176 in the hospital July 1, 1911, of which number 100 were from the District and 76 from the States.

The mortality for the year from all causes was 8+ per cent. Deducting the 13 premature births and the 57 moribund cases, the percentage of deaths is found to be 5.6+, a very low death rate for a hospital of this character.

In the surgical division 1,767 operations were performed, or 285 more than during the previous year.

OUTDOOR DEPARTMENT.

In this department 4,839 were treated—an increase of 292 over last year—as follows:

Medical, 1,258; surgical, 351; nervous, 192; eye, 554; ear, nose, and throat, 437; pediatrics, 344; gynecology, 482; dermatology, 314; genito-urinary, 778; tubercular, 91; orthopedic, 38. The number of visits to this department was 5,637. Twelve thousand seven hundred and twelve prescriptions were compounded and 983 emergency cases were received.

And then follows a list of the cases which have been treated.

Now, I want to say that I have some familiarity with the working of the hospitals here in the District of Columbia, and with one-third of the population, substantially, colored, and this being the only hospital that is practically open to them whereas we have for other people the Providence Hospital, the Garfield Hospital, the Columbia Hospital, the Homeopathic Hospital, the Eye and Ear Hospital, and others not mentioned, and yet here is one-third of the population that is dependent on this one hospital, and from the very best investigation I have been able to make this is the greatest hospital of the District in the treatment of numbers and care for those perhaps who most need care. I believe that this ambulance ought to be given.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if an ambulance was needed at the Freedmen's Hospital, I should favor an electric ambulance. The hospital has an ambulance which the Government purchased five years ago. It is in perfect condition. Dr. Warfield said that perhaps an electric ambulance could be maintained more cheaply. Every hospital in this city, so far as I am aware, has accommodations for colored people. I know that Providence Hospital, the Garfield Hospital, and the Columbia Hospital take colored people, and the Emergency Hospital also takes colored people. There is no necessity for the ambulance. It is true that Dr. Warfield says that he believes that it would be cheaper to have an electric ambulance than the one purchased five years ago; that it would cost less to maintain it. When the time comes, if there is a necessity for a new ambulance I should favor an electric ambulance. There is but one electric ambulance in the city, and that was donated by some people who were very much interested in it. All the other ambulances are drawn by horses. I see no necessity why an electric ambulance should be purchased for this hospital at this time to replace one that is perfectly satisfactory merely because it might be a little more economical to maintain at this time.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BOWMAN. I see by the hearings, in part 2, page 422, that the doctor considers that it is necessary that the hospital should have an electric ambulance.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not read the testimony that way. The statement was made that they had calls from all parts of the District, but that is ignoring the fact that, for instance, within a short distance from the Capitol is the Providence Hospital, and there is no necessity for sending an ambulance out to the Freedmen's Hospital for somebody who needs an ambulance in the vicinity of the Providence Hospital. I know more about that institution than I do about some of the others, because I have been there more times. That is true of all the hospitals in the city. But when an ambulance is sent for, the question is not asked whether it is for white or colored; the ambulance goes and takes care of the person in need of treatment.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the gentleman state how old the present ambulance is?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was purchased five years ago, according to Dr. Warfield.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought possibly it might be worn out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The only reason given is that they thought perhaps it would be more economical to maintain an electric ambulance in the District.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 111, after line 15, by inserting:
"For the installation of an ice plant, $4,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the reason that the committee did not recommend the installation of an ice plant is that the Government has installed an ice plant for the Department of the Interior, and the Department of the Interior sells ice to this institution, and economies in that way result to the Government. There is no necessity for multiplying ice plants in every institution.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment the hearings show that this appropriation ought to be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 111, after line 15, by inserting:
"For the installation of an ash conveyor at the Freedmen's Hospital and Howard University power, heating, and lighting plant, $3,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the hearings show that that item ought to be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 111, after line 15, by inserting:
"For labor and material for construction of a suitable fence inclosing hospital grounds, $12,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the hearings show that the fence is needed and ought to be constructed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 111, after line 15, by inserting:
"For the construction of a pathological building, $25,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the hearings show the necessity and the propriety for this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $64,040.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask now to return to page 103 for the purpose of offering an amendment after line 12 on that page.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the paragraph which has not been agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the analyzing and testing of the coals, lignites, ores, and other mineral fuel substances belonging to or for the use of the United States, $135,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, there is an amendment pending to that paragraph which I ask unanimous consent to withdraw.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 103, in line 12, after the word "States," insert "including personal services in the Bureau of Mines, at Washington, D. C., not in excess of the number and total compensation of those so employed during the fiscal year 1912."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House with a recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 25069, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

Mr. MANN. Before that is done I desire to state that I would like some time on one of the amendments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MANN. Fifteen or 20 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to demand a separate vote on one of the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that the gentleman wait until the other matter is disposed of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it the gentleman from New York withholds his motion for the previous question for the present.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. Is now the proper time to demand a separate vote upon any amendment?

The SPEAKER. Any time before the vote is taken.

Mr. MANN. Let us dispose of the other amendments, then. I desire to have a separate vote on the Beall amendment and the gentleman from Mississippi desires a vote on the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the vote be taken on all amendments except the amendment to appropriate for the enlargement of the Capitol Grounds, the so-called Beall amendment, which limits the expenditure of certain appropriations in the Department of Justice, and the amendment on page 122, which substituted the word "including" for the word "for," in line 2.

The SPEAKER. With the exception of the three amendments named by the gentleman from New York, unless some other gentleman demands a separate vote on some other amendment, the Chair will put the question on the other amendments in gross.

The question is on agreeing to the amendments except the three named by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for one hour.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the so-called Beall amendment provides, among other things, that no part of the appropriations carried in the bill shall be used for the payment of any salary, fee, compensation, or allowance in any form whatever to any person who within two years next preceding the date of his appointment, designation, or employment has held any other office, place, position, or appointment under the United States or any department thereof.

A Member of the House handed me a letter the other day relating to this amendment, written by a gentleman now connected with the Department of Justice. In it he says:

JUNE 18, 1912.

The amendment to the sundry civil bill relative to payment from antitrust appropriation to special assistants to the Attorney General who had held a Government place within two years of employment as special hits me by accident. I held a statutory place and received my present appointment by way of promotion—on the same work and of a permanent nature. I am in the middle of four cases, all of which I hoped to try this year. It would take a new man a year to know them at all, since there are some thousands (six) pages of testimony ready to present to United States district courts in four different districts.

Sincerely, ——— ———.

I have here a letter from the Attorney General upon the subject, which I will read:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., June 18, 1912.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. MANN: I have looked further into the question of the effect of the Beall amendment to the sundry civil bill (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 8782), adopted on Saturday last while the House was in Committee of the Whole. The more closely I study it the more disastrous its effect appears to be. It prohibits the expenditure of any of the appropriations described in the amendment for the payment of any salary, fee, compensation, or allowance in any form whatever, first, to any person who holds any other office, place, position, or appointment under the United States Government or any department thereof; and, second, to any person who within two years next preceding the date of his appointment, designation, or employment has held any other office, place, position, or appointment under the United States Government or any department thereof.

Taking the latter prohibition first, the provision would disqualify 50 special agents, 3 special examiners, and 10 special bank accountants now employed in the Bureau of Investigation, whose compensation is paid from the appropriation for the "detection and prosecution of crimes," all of whom were transferred to their present positions from some other service in the Government. It would also oust the special commissioner in charge of, and three of his principal assistants in, the prosecutions of violations of the white-slave act, which we have been organizing to carry on more effectually during the ensuing year, and to aid in which the House has added $50,000 to this appropriation.

The Assistant Attorney General in charge of customs cases and seven attorneys, the chief clerk and four other clerks, who are paid from the appropriation for the "conduct of customs cases," would have to be dropped.

Seventeen lawyers, five clerks, and one messenger, paid from the appropriation for the enforcement of antitrust laws would also have to go.

The attorney in charge of the prosecutions of customs frauds in the importation of sugar into Philadelphia would be ousted.

Two lawyers, employed and paid from the appropriation for "suits to set aside conveyances of allotted land, Five Civilized Tribes," would be displaced.

Thirty-two lawyers, paid from the appropriation for the payment of special assistants to the Attorney General or to the United States attorneys, to aid in special cases, would also be cut off.

Among the lawyers who would have to be summarily discharged on July 1, under the provision under discussion, would be all the attorneys in charge of the suit against the United States Steel Corporation and either all or substantially all of the attorneys in charge of the prosecutions of—

The National Cash Register Co. (civil and criminal);
The United Shoe Machinery Co. (civil and criminal);
The so-called Bath Tub Trust (civil and criminal);
The American Sugar Refining Co.;
The International Harvester Co.;
The coal-carrying roads in Ohio and West Virginia;
The various lumber combinations (civil and criminal); and
The various steamship pools; all under the antitrust law.
The various land-fraud suits against the Pacific railroads, including the Oregon and California land-grant suit and the Union Pacific oil-land cases.
The Alaska coal-land-fraud cases.
The White Earth Indian frauds.
The Alaska Bank cases.

So far as it affects the payments out of the appropriation "Miscellaneous expenses, United States courts," under the language used the department would apparently be unable to employ an expert witness, an interpreter, or a stenographer in any case if he had within two years previously served the Government under any other appointment or held any office, place, or position thereunder. It would exclude the use of any bank examiner from the Treasury Department as an expert in connection with pending cases for violation of the national banking laws.

It would seem that we would be unable to obtain the services of any employees in other departments of the Government and pay them as experts, and that they could only be subpœnaed as ordinary witnesses and paid from the appropriation "Fees of witnesses, United States courts," and, of course, under those circumstances they could not be expected to prepare themselves as experts to testify on the Government's behalf.

The more carefully this amendment is studied the more deadly and far-reaching appears to be its effect in utterly destroying the efficient conduct of the Government's law business. I am quite sure that the proponent of the amendment could not have understood what he was doing when he offered it on the floor, and that certainly a majority of those who voted for it could not have had the faintest idea of the far-reaching effect which would be produced by it. I am,

Faithfully, yours,

GEO. W. WICKERSHAM,
Attorney General.

I do not know whether it is the purpose—I apprehend it was not the purpose—of the amendment to absolutely destroy the activities of the Government in prosecutions under the antitrust law in the customs-frauds cases and all other cases being carried on by the Government, but under the provisions of the amendment no fee, compensation, or allowance whatever can be paid to anyone who has served the Government in any capacity within two year's time.

It was stated here the other day by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COX] that a misstatement was made on the floor of this House at one time by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] in reference to the employment of Wade Ellis. I have secured a statement in regard to that from the Attorney General, which I will ask the Clerk to read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1912.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. MANN: I notice in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Tuesday, June 18, some statements made by Mr. COX of Ohio concerning the employment of the Hon. Wade H. Ellis as special assistant under this department and some reflections upon statements made by Mr. LONGWORTH in a discussion which took place in the House at about the time of Mr. Ellis's resignation from the position of assistant to the Attorney General in March, 1910. In the course of that discussion, which is reported in the RECORD (pp. 3205 et seq.), Mr. LONGWORTH stated that Mr. Ellis had sent in his resignation to the Department of Justice on March 1, that his successor was appointed March 14, and that Mr. Ellis had not drawn a cent of salary since the day his resignation was sent in, and he said:

"The fact is, I presume, Mr. Ellis has had experience in the trial of these beef-trust cases and he for some time will give the benefit of his information to his successor, possibly; and I say my only statement is that he is not and will not be paid out of the funds of the department or any other department."——

Mr. LONGWORTH's statements were entirely accurate. Mr. Ellis handed me his resignation as assistant to the Attorney General on March 1, 1910, to be accepted at my pleasure, with the understanding that it should be accepted as soon as I could determine upon his successor. That successor, Mr. (now Senator) KENYON, was nominated by the President to the Senate on March 14, 1910, and confirmed March 23. About the middle of March Mr. Ellis advised me that in view of some criticism which had been made concerning the propriety of his acting in a political capacity in Ohio and at the same time being a salaried official of the Department of Justice, he had determined not to accept any salary after March 1, the day when he handed me his resignation. At the time of that resignation Mr. Ellis had been engaged in the preparation for argument in the Supreme Court of a very important case, known as the Missouri River rate case, and as I found it impossible to get anyone competent to prepare and argue that case within the short time then remaining before it came on for argument in the Supreme Court, at my earnest solicitation Mr. Ellis accepted a special appointment to argue that case, and appeared in the Supreme Court on April 5 and 6, 1910, and conducted the argument, having previously prepared the brief. The decision of the court was rendered in favor of the Government May 31, 1910 (218 U. S., 88, 113).

About the 1st of September, 1910, Solicitor General Bowers died very suddenly, and it became necessary to retain counsel to argue a number of cases in which the Government was interested which were on the docket of the Supreme Court at the term to begin a month later. I therefore retained Mr. Ellis as counsel to prepare and argue, and he did argue, in the Supreme Court the cases of Muskrat v. United States (219 U. S., 346) and Brown & Gritts v. United States (219 U. S., 346), important cases involving the constitutionality of legislation concerning Cherokee Indian lands; the so-called Southern Pacific Terminal case (219 U. S., 498), involving the validity of important orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission regarding charges of the terminal company at Galveston, Tex.; the Southern Pacific lumber case (219 U. S., 433), involving the validity of an important order of the Interstate Commerce Commission concerning rates of transportation of lumber; and the case of Marchie Tiger v. Western Investment Co. (221 U. S., 286), which was twice argued in the Supreme Court, and which involved difficult questions regarding the rights of Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory; in all of which cases, except the Southern Pacific lumber case, the decision of the court was in favor of the Government.

During the same period of vacancy in the Office of Solicitor General I retained Mr. Ellis as special counsel in the Commodities Clause cases (United States v. Lehigh Valley Railroad Co., 220 U. S., 257), in which the original Commodities Clause decision, reported in 213 United States, 366, was very materially modified in favor of the Government. I also, during the same period, employed Mr. Ellis in one other case, namely, the prosecution particularly by the Government against the so-called Electrical Trust, which resulted in the entry of a decree of injunction with the acquiescence of the defendants in October, 1911, granting comprehensive relief against a combination which controlled the manufacture and sale of incandescent electric lamps.

Mr. Ellis has had no retainer under this department since August last, and he is not at present employed in any capacity. For his services in the cases mentioned, which resulted in very great advantage to the Government, he was paid compensation at an exceedingly moderate rate, considerably less, I think it is safe to say, than would have been charged by any counsel of equal capacity who had not been recently connected with the law department of the Government.

However, the point of this letter is simply that all of these appointments arose after Mr. LONGWORTH'S statement in the House referred to above, and that they were not in contemplation at the time Mr. Ellis resigned his position with the department.

Faithfully, yours,

GEO. W. WICKERSHAM,
Attorney General.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the majority side of the House, this amendment having been inserted from the floor and not having been part of the bill as reported from the committee, may see its way to reject the amendment, which certainly, in the form in which it is, should not be passed——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, there is no desire to interfere with gentlemen who are now employed on any Government case. I think everybody agrees there has been some abuse in this matter, and I suggest to the gentleman that by inserting after the word "or," in the fourth line from the bottom of the amendment——

Mr. MANN. Between what two words?

Mr. FITZGERALD. "Or any department thereof or," insert these words: "to anyone appointed, designated, or employed hereafter who shall."

Mr. MANN. So it would read——

Mr. FITZGERALD. So it would read, "or any department thereof or to anyone appointed, designated, or employed hereafter who within two years," and so forth. The first part of the amendment prohibits the payment out of different appropriations for compensation to persons now in the Government employ—that is, they can not pay some person now employed on a case some special compensation—but this provision would provide by making it hereafter.

Mr. MANN. Well, it would imply that, but it would not say that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it does.

Mr. BURLESON. It can be so framed.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me a matter of this kind ought to be permanently cared for.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There has been an abuse, and I think it is indicated from the letter of the Attorney General himself, and I believe the House should take some kind of step to put a stop to it.

Mr. MANN. I do not see anything embraced in the letter of the gentleman indicating that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know of an instance which occurred just a few days ago. The Attorney General made two attempts to increase the compensation of a head of one of the divisions in his office. The compensation was at the rate of $3,500 a year and Congress refused to do it. That gentleman occupying that place appeared before the Committee on Appropriations and made an appeal for an additional appropriation for the work of his division and the day after he appeared and the inquiry had been concluded the Attorney General transferred him from the statutory roll at $3,500 a year to this lump-sum appropriation at $6,000.

Mr. MANN. Well, perhaps the Attorney General wanted to keep him.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is a gross abuse and should not be tolerated.

Mr. MANN. That depends.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It appears in the opinion of the Attorney General the compensation of this man should be increased, although Congress had on several occasions declined to accede to his request.

Mr. MANN. Congress declined to increase the salary of that position, but that does not necessarily affect the compensation that may be paid an individual in some other position.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But he is put in charge of the same work that he was doing at the other compensation at not only $6,000 a year, but in addition he is granted $6 a day when absent either from Baltimore or Washington, and as he could not be in both places at the same time he will get $6 a day additional for every day in the year.

Mr. MANN. They have legislative committees in this House. The committee presided over by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL], who introduced this amendment, or the committee presided over by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] would have jurisdiction of the matter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman who offered the amendment is chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice.

Mr. MANN. I say he would have jurisdiction.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was the result of an investigation which he made.

Mr. MANN. When you transferred the Bureau of Investigation over here they took over a number of people who had been formerly employed under Wilkie in the Secret Service—a desirable and proper thing to do. It could not be done under this, and it would affect those very people.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under this amendment it provides who shall hereafter be designated or employed. That removes the objection that is made by inserting those words.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman's amendment does what he thinks it will do. In the way he had it it does not seem to do so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have changed it. I have transferred the word "hereafter." Let me read it to the gentleman:

The department thereof or to anyone hereafter appointed, designated, or employed who, in the two years next preceding.

Mr. MANN. Or to anyone hereafter. Put it down to that time, at least, to anybody already appointed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, it prevents any payment being made to any person employed in the service.

Mr. MANN. Employed now. The pending amendment applies to anybody now in the service who, within two years of his appointment——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The amendment is that no part of any one or a number of appropriations shall be used for the payment of any salary, fee, compensation, or allowance in any form whatever to any person who holds any other office, place, position, or appointment under the United States Government or any department thereof, or to anyone hereafter appointed or employed, who, within two years next preceding the date——

Mr. MANN. Of course, if the gentleman inserts the word "hereafter" there, it would not affect anyone now in the service. But on the other merits of the proposition it is perfectly patent that it is desirable to transfer people at times from other bureaus or departments of the Government to the Bureau of Investigation. It is desirable at times to take people who have been educated in that service and who go outside to get them special employment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think so. I think there are abuses. I will cite another one.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt the gentleman can cite many cases.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Secretary of the Treasury urged very strongly that the compensation of special agents in the Treasury Department be increased, and also wanted the special agents of the Treasury Department consolidated with the Secret Service. Congress declined to consolidate them, but did increase the compensation of the special agents; and he fixed the compensation of the chief special agent at $4,500 a year. And the Chief of the Secret Service was immediately designated as chief special agent in the Treasury Department and designated as Acting Chief of the Secret Service, and the only thing accomplished was to give him the benefit of the increased compensation. There are many abuses that this would prevent, I am quite confident.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that if this be an abuse, to increase the salary of an officer by paying him an extra amount out of the lump-sum appropriation to which the gentleman has referred, there is on the legislative bill an amendment, inserted by the Senate, prohibiting that, which I have no doubt will be agreed to in conference. That shows the necessity of that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not seen that. This amendment applies to certain specific appropriations in the Department of Justice alone. I believe it ought to be adopted.

Mr. MANN. It will destroy the good effect of prosecuting under these laws. That is all.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] give me five minutes?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment which appears on page 8249 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. That is the one the gentleman spoke of?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL].

The Clerk read as follows.

Amend by inserting, after the word "or," in line 13 of the amendment as it appears on page 8249 of the RECORD, the following: "To anyone hereafter appointed, designated, or employed"——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, in order that there may be no misunderstanding as to where that amendment comes in, I will ask the Clerk to report that part of the amendment beginning "or any department thereof" and continuing with "or to anyone hereafter appointed, designated, and employed," the "or" being the second "or" on the fourth line from the bottom.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman [Mr. FITZGERALD] yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Has the amendment been reported, Mr. Speaker? Will the gentleman give me some time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are several gentlemen who wished to participate in the debate, but we wish to get the bill finished. This is a very unusual proceeding to be discussed at this time, and I do not think more time should be asked for, in view of the liberality of treatment that has been shown.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have not spoken one minute on this bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I regret I can not yield. I can not yield to the gentleman without also yielding to others.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] declines to yield. The Clerk will report that part of the amendment which will contain the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, if it is agreed to, so that the House can get the sense of it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, after the word "or," in line 13 of the amendment as it appears on page 8249 of the RECORD, the following: "To anyone hereafter appointed, designated, or employed," so that it will read, "position, or appointment under the United States Government, or any department thereof, or to anyone hereafter appointed, designated, or employed, or who within two years next preceding"——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Strike out the "or" before "who." It should be "appointed, designated, or employed who," and so forth.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the whole thing over, so that there will not be any mistake about it. The Clerk will read the lines that will include the words offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], if they are ever put in, so that we can see how it reads.

The Clerk read as follows:

To any person who holds any other office, place, position, or appointment under the United States Government, or any department thereof, or to anyone hereafter appointed, designated, or employed who within two years next preceding the date of his appointment, designation, or employment has held any other office, place, position, or appointment under the United States Government or any department thereof.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL].

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL] as amended by the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. I ask for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 23.

So the amendment of Mr. BEALL of Texas as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 122, line 2, by striking out the word "for" and inserting the word "including" in place thereof.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and the remaining amendment to its final passage.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the remaining amendment.

Page 92, after line 20, insert:

"Enlarging the Capitol Grounds: To continue the acquisition of the land described in the sundry civil appropriation act, approved June 25, 1910, and as authorized and prescribed in said act, for enlarging the Capitol Grounds, $500,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 43, noes 21.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I want a yea-and-nay vote on this proposition. I do not want to be compelled to make a point of no quorum, but I am willing that this matter shall go over until we can get a quorum without difficulty.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, it is a well-known fact that there will be no quorum in this House until after the 1st of July. It is important that the members of the committee controlling this bill at the other end of the Capitol shall get it immediately in order to get to work on it. The gentleman from Mississippi knows the situation as well as anybody.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will allow me the suggestion, I desired to offer a motion to recommit and have a roll call. We also desired to have a roll call on several amendments agreed to in this bill. We have not done that because of the situation in the House, and it seems to me that the gentleman from Mississippi ought not to precipitate a situation which would prevent the speedy passage of the bill.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I am very much opposed, as was evidenced by the fight in the Committee of the Whole——

Mr. MANN. We are quite willing to admit that the gentleman made a good fight.

Mr. SISSON. I do not think that appropriation bills ought ever to be passed without a quorum being present. But the situation is a very peculiar one, due to the fact that there are two great conventions, one now in session, and the other to be in session next week. In view of that situation I shall not ask for a roll call, although I really believe that I ought to do it.

The SPEAKER. The ayes are 43 and the noes are 21, and the amendment is agreed to. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The amended bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MCMORRAN, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for two weeks on account of illness in his family.

BILLS ON THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order, which is the call of bills on the Private Calendar in their order.

Mr. GARNER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. When these bills are called will any objection under the request for unanimous consent carry the bill over; that is, it will not be considered?

The SPEAKER. That is as the Chair understands it.

Mr. GARNER. Now, as these bills are called on the regular calendar it would facilitate matters if those in charge of the bills would ask unanimous consent to consider them in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. I will ask unanimous consent that in the call of the Private Calendar bills not objected to shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SIMS. Before that is put, Mr. Speaker, I am not asking for consideration under the special order.

The SPEAKER. But there was an agreement on June 14 which the Chair will state. The RECORD says:

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. Now, the Chair will state it so there can not be any mistake on the part of Members. The request is, next week after this sundry civil bill gets through the House, except Monday and Wednesday, and allowing the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] a day for pensions, then any bill on the Private Calendar not objected to shall be considered.

Mr. SIMS. I misunderstood the order, if it was intended to deprive committees of their regular days. I thought it was to make private claims in order on days upon which they would otherwise not be in order.

The SPEAKER. That is what it does.

Mr. SIMS. Then to-day war claims are in order.

The SPEAKER. That is true; but it seems to the Chair this order agreed to by the House supersedes and takes precedence over that. It swept everything out, except Mondays and Wednesdays, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] for the consideration of pensions.

Mr. SIMS. I certainly never would have agreed to it if I knew that.

The SPEAKER. Of course, that is neither here nor there.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee was here when the request was agreed to. The request made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] would have struck Friday out if I had not asked that an exception of Friday be made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee will gain by this order. He may lose this piece of the evening which is before us, but private bills are in order now every day except Monday and Wednesday and the day that the gentleman from Missouri will have.

Mr. SIMS. I know, but they will only be taken up in their order, and it will be impossible to reach bills from the War Claims Committee.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when bills are called upon the Private Calendar in their regular order, those to which no objection is made shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that when bills on the Private Calendar are called in their order those to which no objection is made shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that some other Friday be given to the consideration of war claims. I am quite serious in my statement that I did not know that this order was to displace the preference that we would have on this day.

The SPEAKER. What is the request of the gentleman?

Mr. SIMS. That a day be set aside for the consideration of private bills coming from the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman designate any day?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, so that we may progress with the matter before the House, I shall object.

Mr. SIMS. I shall ask that to-morrow, Saturday, be set aside for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. That is already set aside for the consideration of pensions.

BILLS ON THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the call of bills on the Private Calendar.

SHEPLER W. FITZGERALD AND ALDEN G. STRONG.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5046) to authorize the appointment of Shepler Ward FitzGerald and Alden George Strong to the grade of second lieutenant in the Army.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Shepler Ward FitzGerald and Alden George Strong to the grade of second lieutenant in the Coast Artillery Corps, United States Army, with lineal rank in accordance with their respective ratings at the competitive examination held under the law by the War Department in September, 1911.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. JAMES). Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill reported for the relief of these two young men, who received appointments as second lieutenants in the Army, stood the examination, but before they could be confirmed by the Senate they had reached the age beyond which second lieutenants of the Army can not be given their appointments. This bill simply permits the President to again send their names to the Senate to be confirmed. I do not think there can be any objection to the bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. This simply authorizes him to do that. It does not require him to do it?

Mr. HAY. The bill authorizes him to do it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HENRY HARRISON HALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 20721) to authorize the President to reappoint Henry Harrison Hall as second lieutenant in the Army.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

HEIRS OF MYRA CLARK GAINES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17501) for the relief of the heirs of Myra Clark Gaines, deceased.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

DANIEL W. ABBOTT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12375) authorizing Daniel W. Abbott to make homestead entry.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Daniel W. Abbott be, and he is hereby, empowered to make entry of and acquire title to the south half of the southeast quarter and the south half of the southwest quarter of section 6 in township 10 south, range 28 east, Boise meridian, under the general provisions of the homestead laws of the United States, notwithstanding he may have heretofore exhausted his right to make entry under said laws, and he shall be given credit, under any entry made by him under this act, for the full period of such actual residence as he may have maintained on said land or on land embraced in the legal subdivision of land adjoining said land prior to the time he makes entry under this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask if this is a Senate bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is a House bill.

Mr. SIMS. I see that the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] reported the bill. Is the gentleman present?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Idaho is not present. This bill validates a homestead entry which a man would have in any event, except that he located his house a few rods over onto land that he did not take up.

Mr. SIMS. Will there be any contest upon the matter?

Mr. MANN. No; I think not. I think the bill would have been passed before this time if the gentleman had not reserved the right to object.

Mr. SIMS. I wanted to find out whether there was to be any controversy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SIMS. Is the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] present?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, the next bill is from the Committee on Claims, and by an agreement heretofore made with the chairman of the Committee on Claims, the war claims bills have had two days and he has had two for bills from his committee, and by agreement the Committee on War Claims was to have the next day, and I want to ask if he will not agree that the bills reported here from the Committee on Claims may be passed over until after the bills reported from the Committee on War Claims are first considered?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman would not have any jurisdiction to consent to that.

Mr. HAY. These are individual bills.

Mr. SIMS. I did not want to object, but it will take a lot of time, and they will have had three days to our one.

Mr. POU. I will be very glad to make any arrangement to suit my friend from Tennessee; but under this order everything has been swept aside and I do not believe I would have any right to make any such agreement.

Mr. SIMS. The House, by unanimous consent, can, but I will not submit the request unless the gentleman is ready to yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MANN. What is the request?

Mr. SIMS. My request is that on the call of this calendar that bills reported from the Committee on Claims be not called until bills reported from the Committee on War Claims are called.

Mr. MANN. Well, we will never get to the Committee on War Claims that way. They will have to wait the call of all bills reported from other committees first, and therefore I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Private Calendar.

SNARE & TRIEST CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill S. 2512, an act for the relief of the Snare & Triest Co.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

CHARLEY CLARK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10784) for the relief of Charley Clark, a homestead settler on certain lands therein described.

The bill was read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know who has charge of this.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. STEENERSON asked me to look after it.

Mr. MANN. There is a Senate bill (No. 6153), and I understand the gentleman desires to have the Senate bill substituted for the House bill. I do not know whether the Senate engrossed bill is over here or not.

Mr. MILLER. I presume it is in the hands of the committee.

Mr. MANN. The House could not do that unless it had the engrossed copy here, and there is no use in passing this bill. I ask to pass it over temporarily without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to pass the bill without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CAPT. HAROLD L. JACKSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19788) to restore Capt. Harold L. Jackson, retired, to the active list of the Army.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

LLOYD L. R. KREBS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7142) authorizing the President to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Lloyd L. R. Krebs, late a captain in the Medical Corps of the United States Army, a major in the Medical Corps on the retired list, and increasing the retired list by one for the purposes of this act.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Lloyd L. R. Krebs, late a captain in the Medical Corps of the United States Army, to be a major of the Medical Corps on the retired list of the Army. And the retired list is hereby increased by one for the purposes of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not object to this bill. It is one of the most pitiful cases that I have ever known. This is a case of a surgeon in the Army who was ordered here under the rules and regulations for an examination for his promotion. When he went before this examining board he was suffering with tuberculosis, and the board recommended him to be retired from the Army. The recommendation was overruled by the War Department and he was ordered again before the board for examination, notwithstanding the fact that he was suffering with tuberculosis. As a consequence of his physical condition he failed on examination and, under the law, was put out of the Army and was refused the privilege of being put on the retired list. This man is in a dying condition from tuberculosis. Personally, I have no interest whatever in the case; these people live in California. But I happen to be familiar with all the facts in the case and I believe that a gross injustice was done this man. This bill is recommended by the War Department and is particularly recommended by the Surgeon General, and I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not interpose an objection to the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it is a tribute to the large heart of the gentleman. I have examined the papers in this case very carefully and am liable to make an error of judgment. I do not believe the bill ought to pass, but I would like to discuss it some time when it comes up. It is not practicable to do that to-day. This bill is early on the calendar and will undoubtedly be on the calendar on a Friday before long. Therefore I feel compelled to object now.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from further consideration of the Senate bill (No. 1337) to the same purpose, and that it be placed upon the House Calendar in lieu of the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. It can not be done in that way.

Mr. HAY. Why not?

Mr. MANN. The bill is not up for consideration. The committee can report——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I would not have objected if they were going to consider it and substitute the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JAMES S. BAER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 21952) for the relief of James S. Baer.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws James S. Baer, late captain Company G, First Regiment Maryland Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 28th day of September, 1864: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill just read?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CHARLEY CLARK.

Mr. MANN. A moment ago there was passed temporarily, without prejudice, the bill H. R. 10784.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

An act (H. R. 10784) for the relief of Charley Clark, a homestead settler on certain lands therein described.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read a similar Senate bill, in order to see whether objection shall be made to substituting that for the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 6153) for the relief of Charley Clark, a homestead settler on certain lands therein described.

Be it enacted, etc., That the homestead entry of Charley Clark for the west half of the northeast quarter of section 31, in township 153 north, range 40, in the Crookston land district, Minnesota, under the act approved February 20, 1904, entitled "An act to authorize the sale of a part of what is known as the Red Lake Indian Reservation in the State of Minnesota," upon which final proof and payment was made, but which was held for cancellation by the Secretary of the Interior for want of qualification to make the same, be, and the same is hereby, allowed and permitted to remain of record as of the date of said entry, and that patent shall issue in the name of said Charley Clark for said land.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the Senate bill as a substitute for the House bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was read a third time and passed.

HEIRS OF JAMES S. ROLLINS.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18904) to perfect the title of the heirs of James S. Rollins, deceased, to bounty-land warrant No. 58479, issued to George Hickum, teamster, United States Quartermaster's Department, War with Mexico.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized and directed to recognize the heirs of James S. Rollins, deceased, of Columbia, Mo., as the lawful owners of land warrant No. 58479, issued on March 11, 1857, to George Hickum, teamster, United States Quartermaster Department, War with Mexico; and that he instruct the Commissioner of the General Land Office to permit said heirs to use said land warrant in such manner as they see fit, in accordance with law and the rules and regulations of the General Land Office.

Also the following House amendments were read:

Page 1, lines 3 and 4, insert after the word "Interior" the following: "and the Commissioner of the General Land Office."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

Amend, page 2, by striking out lines 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, after the word "Mexico."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

OTTO NEUMANN SVERDRUP.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the Senate joint resolution 69, authorizing the licensing and employment of Otto Neumann Sverdrup as master of vessels of the United States.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas Otto Neumann Sverdrup, a subject of the King of Norway, who has rendered great service to science as a navigator and explorer, has lately become a resident and declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and desires to obtain the privilege of serving as master of vessels of the United States before his naturalization as a citizen can be procured under existing law: Now therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the right and privilege to be licensed and to serve as master of vessels of the United States, conferred by law upon citizens of the United States, be, and the same are hereby, given and granted to said Otto Neumann Sverdrup.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was passed.

BARKLEY S. DENISON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11627) to correct the military record of Barkley S. Denison.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

MATHEW T. FULLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16993) for the relief of Matthew T. Fuller.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of pension laws, Mathew T. Fuller shall hereafter be held and considered to have been absent with proper authority and in the line of duty as a soldier at the time of his capture by the enemy while serving as a member of Company D, Sixty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF BENJAMIN S. ROBERTS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4125) for the relief of the heirs of Benjamin S. Roberts.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

HEIRS OF ROBERT S. GILL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2127) for the relief of the heirs of Robert S. Gill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the heirs of Robert S. Gill, of Memphis, Tenn., out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,520, to compensate them for injuries received by Robert S. Gill while in the employ of the Government on the Panama Canal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

AMERICAN SURETY CO. OF NEW YORK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3469) for the relief of the American Surety Co. of New York.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the American Surety Co. of New York the sum of $115.51, as reimbursement in full of a payment made by the American Surety Co. of New York, as surety on the bond of John W. Coltrane, a railway postal clerk, to cover the sum embezzled by him, said payment having been made to the Postmaster General and covered into the Treasury of the United States without knowledge of the fact that a like sum to cover the same embezzlement had already been paid by said John W. Coltrane to the clerk of the United States District Court for the Eastern Division of North Carolina and turned into the Treasury of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

DOUGLAS B. THOMPSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2601) for the relief of Douglas B. Thompson.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,500 to Douglas B. Thompson, late an employee in the service of the Isthmian Canal Commission, for the loss of a leg and consequent physical disability incident to said service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

REIMBURSEMENT TO CERTAIN FIRE INSURANCE COMPANIES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2819) to reimburse certain fire insurance companies the amounts paid by them for property destroyed by fire in suppressing the bubonic plague in the Territory of Hawaii in the years 1899 and 1900.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

CONVEYANCE OF REAL ESTATE IN JONESVILLE, MICH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16191) to convey certain real estate in the village of Jonesville, Hillsdale County, Mich.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Solicitor of the Treasury is authorized and empowered, upon the payment of the sum of $10, to convey the apparent interest of the United States in lot 21 of Olds plat of the village of Jonesville, in township 6 south, range 3 west, in Hillsdale County, Mich., to Milo D. Bacon for the purpose of completing the title of said Bacon to said property, and that the United States incur no expense or liability whatever in consequence of such conveyance, it being understood that the solicitor is to convey said land in the nature of a quitclaim deed to said Milo D. Bacon, without guaranty or warranty of any nature or kind whatsoever.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read the committee amendment, as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 4, by inserting after the word "empowered" the words "upon the payment of the sum of $10."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES W. CHRISMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5198) to authorize the issuance of patent to James W. Chrisman for the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, the southeast quarter, and the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 13, and the north half of the northeast quarter of section 24, township 29 north, range 113 west of the sixth principal meridian.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be issued to James W. Chrisman a patent for the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, the southeast quarter, and the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 13, and the north half of the northeast quarter of section 24, all in township 29 north, range 113 west of the sixth principal meridian.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE A. ARMES.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11397) authorizing the appointment of Maj. George A. Armes, United States Army, retired, to the rank and grade of major general on the retired list of the Army.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

FIFTH-THIRD NATIONAL BANK OF CINCINNATI, OHIO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16518) for the relief of the Fifth-Third National Bank of Cincinnati, Ohio.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a duplicate registered bond of the 3 per cent loan of 1908 to 1918, in favor of the Fifth-Third National Bank of Cincinnati, Ohio, in lieu of United States 3 per cent registered bond, loan of 1908 to 1918, No. 37195, for $1,000 inscribed in the name of Jacob B. Eiberfeld, alleged to have been lost or mislaid after having been assigned in blank, sold, and delivered to the Fifth-Third National Bank of Cincinnati: Provided, That the said bank shall first file in the Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the missing bond, in such form and with such sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury, to indemnify the United States against loss on account of said original bond.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

GUSTAV A. HESSELBERGER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15286) for the relief of Gustav A. Hesselberger.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

JOHN TREFFEISEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 606) for the relief of John Treffeisen.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think we ought to have some information about this bill; there is nothing in the report.

Mr. MANN. There is not a word of information in the report.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think we ought to pass the bill without some information. If there is no one here to explain it, I shall object. Mr. Speaker, I do object.

JOHN K. WREN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 22939) for the relief of John K. Wren.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws John K. Wren, who served in Company D, Sixty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from said company and regiment on the 16th day of December, 1863.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, amend by inserting after the word "sixty-three" the following proviso:

"Provided, That no rights or benefits under any law shall accrue to the said John K. Wren prior to the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

G. A. EMBRY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 183) for the relief of G. A. Embry.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

CATHERINE RATCHFORD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4050) for the relief of Catherine Ratchford.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask whether this bill was referred to the War Department or any report received from the department in relation to this injury.

Mr. JACKSON. I had the report this morning, but I do not remember. It is the bill of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY].

Mr. MANN. There is nothing in the report of the committee and nothing in the Senate report further than is disclosed in the bill. It seems to me that where we are paying for personal injuries caused by some one in the Government service, it is only fair that we should have a statement from them as to their side of the case and as to the extent of the injuries.

Mr. JACKSON. This is a bill of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY], and he is absent just at this minute. I ask to have it passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. I will object, Mr. Speaker. That does not affect the status of the bill any.

LIGHTHOUSE TENDER "MANZANITA."

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 837) to reimburse the officers and crew of the lighthouse tender Manzanita for personal-property losses sustained by them on the foundering of that tender October 6, 1905.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,642.55 to the officers and crew of the lighthouse tender Manzanita for personal-property losses sustained by them on the foundering of that tender on October 6, 1905, as set forth in the letter of April 25, 1906, from the Department of Commerce and Labor to the Treasury Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

J. H. SCHMIDT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16720) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay J. H. Schmidt $75 damages for trespass of certain Indian school cattle at Rainey Mountain Indian School in Oklahoma.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay to J. H. Schmidt, out of any balances of appropriations for the support and civilization of the Apache, Kiowa, and Comanche Indians, for the fiscal year 1911 or 1912, the sum of $75 in full compensation for damage sustained by him through trespass of cattle belonging to the Rainey Mountain Indian School.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HARNEY NATIONAL FOREST.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 21259) to allow an exchange of certain lands in the Harney National Forest.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the transfer by John L. Baird to the United States of title to the east half of the southeast quarter, and lot No. 1 in section 4, and lot No. 4 in section 3, all in township 1 south, range 1 east, of Black Hills meridian, containing 155.96 acres, situated in the Black Hills National Forest, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, upon the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, to issue a patent to said John L. Baird for the lands covered by the Keen Stone Placer mineral survey No. 1947, in Lawrence County, S. Dak., containing 90.978 acres; and the lands thus transferred to the United States shall thereupon become a part of the Harney National Forest.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the next bill on the Private Calendar is a pension bill, which under the order of to-day will be laid aside, as will other pension bills that are upon this calendar.

DELAWARE TRANSPORTATION CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 22111) for the relief of the Delaware Transportation Co., owner of the American steamer Dorothy.

The Clerk read the bill, as follws:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Delaware Transportation Co., owner of the American steamer Dorothy, injured in collision with the U. S. steam collier Sterling in Chesapeake Bay on December 3, 1911, for and on account of the damage to said steamship Dorothy by reason of said collision, may be submitted to the United States Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, the district in which said collision occurred, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty; and the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine any suits brought and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due, against the United States, upon the same principles and measure of liability, with costs as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, and with the same rights of appeal.

SEC. 2. That notice of the suits shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States and to the Secretary of the Navy, as may be provided by the order of said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney to appear for and defend the United States.

SEC. 3. That should damages be found to be due the said Delaware Transportation Co., as owner of said steamship Dorothy, the amount of the final decree therefor shall be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months from the date of the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

SARAH A. WAITE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 547) for the relief of Sarah A. Waite.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Sarah A. Waite, widow of George B. Waite, who at the time of his death was a first sergeant on the retired list of the United States Army and a civilian employee in the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army, the sum of $1,050, as full compensation for the death of said George B. Waite, resulting from injuries received while in the discharge of his duty as a teamster in the employ of the post quartermaster at Vancouver Barracks, State of Washington, on the 3d day of December, 1907.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JOHANNA S. STOECKLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4189) for the relief of Johanna S. Stoeckle.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of this bill be passed without prejudice. The reason is that a bill has passed this House which covers that and all similar cases, and there will probably be no necessity for passing this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ALBERT S. HENDERER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4751) for the relief of Albert S. Henderer.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Albert S. Henderer, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,572.04 for damages arising out of an injury sustained by him while employed in the east gun shop, United States navy yard, Washington, D. C., on the 11th day of August, 1903.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT H. PECK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4509) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Robert H. Peck a captain in the Army.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, the Senate passed a similar bill (S. 6636), which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that the Senate bill be considered.

Mr. MANN. Is the Senate bill here?

Mr. KAHN. There is a Senate bill exactly like it.

Mr. SULZER. As I understand it the bills are identical.

Mr. KAHN. Yes; they are identical.

Mr. MANN. You can not pass the Senate bill unless you have the engrossed copy of the bill here. Is the engrossed copy of the Senate bill on the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not here.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ELIZA B. HAUSE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1508) for the relief of the estate of Eliza B. Hause.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is one of the same class of bills that we have just passed over.

Mr. AINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think we better object to it.

Mr. AINEY. It is included in the omnibus bill which has passed the House.

Mr. MANN. I object.

PATRICK HOWE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7434) for the relief of Patrick Howe.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, Patrick Howe shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private in Company B, Fifty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, on the 1st day of February, 1865: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HERMAN HAUPT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 20613) for the proper recognition of services rendered by Herman Haupt during the Civil War.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Let the bill go over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS OF THE ATTORNEY OF RECORD INVOLVING CERTAIN INDIAN ALLOTMENTS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5776) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to adjust and settle the claims of the attorney of record involving certain Indian allotments, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to consider the claim of the attorney of record in the matter of the enrollment and allotment of lands to Virgil H., Willie A., and Oscar R. Esterbrook, minor children of Frank Esterbrook, and Pearl May, A. Ray, J. Otis, and Dora Edith Williams, minor children of C. O. Williams, enrolled members of the Cascade Band of Indians and allotted on the Yakima Reservation in the State of Washington, and to allow said attorney such fee as he may consider reasonable and just, and to pay the same out of any money standing to the credit of said minor children or which may hereafter become due them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HAROLD HANCOCK TAINTOR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 23934) to authorize the appointment of Harold Hancock Taintor to the grade of second lieutenant in the Army.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Harold Hancock Taintor to the grade of second lieutenant in the United States Army, with lineal rank in accordance with his rating at the competitive examination held under the law by the War Department in January, 1912.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, in view of the fact that the Senate has passed a similar bill (S. 7018), which has been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that the Senate bill be substituted for the House bill. I have an engrossed copy of the Senate bill in my hand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa requests that an engrossed copy of the Senate bill be substituted for a similar House bill. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Let us have the bill read.

The Senate bill was read.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a similar House bill was laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. HAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LIEUT. COL. CONSTANTINE MARRAST PERKINS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9290) for the reinstatement of Lieut. Col. Constantine Marrast Perkins to the active list of the Marine Corps.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

REFUNDING CERTAIN TONNAGE TAXES AND LIGHT DUES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2359) to refund certain tonnage taxes and light dues.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to refund, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following amounts to the respective named companies, assessed and collected under section 4225, Revised Statutes, which amounts are hereby appropriated: Ninety-three dollars in the case of the American dredge Erie, without enrollment, upon the application of the Duluth-Superior Dredging Co.; and $270 in the case of American scows Nos. 1 and 2, American dredge Lincoln, and American derrick scow No. 1, without enrollment, upon the application of the Duluth Marine Contracting Co.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ERROR IN TREATY, CHOCTAW INDIANS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5141) to correct an error in the record of the supplemental treaty of September 28, 1830, made with the Choctaw Indians, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the reservation of section 8 and the west half of section 9, in township 19 north, range 16 east, Choctaw meridian, Mississippi, to Thomas Wall, and the sale thereof by him to Anthony Winston, made on December 11, 1833, be, and the same are hereby, approved, and the title thereto confirmed in the said Thomas Wall and his vendee, the said Anthony Winston; and the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby authorized and directed to cause the proper entries to be made upon the land records of the land office at Jackson, Miss., and of the General Land Office, showing that said land was reserved to the said Thomas Wall.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A. W. TORESON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 22437) for the relief of A. W. Toreson, son and heir of Anna M. Toreson, deceased.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to public entry the following parcel of land situate in Modoc County, Susanville land district, in the State of California, to wit:

The south half of the southwest quarter, the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter, and the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter, section 9, township 41 north, range 10 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, in California, containing 160 acres.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, upon compliance with the foregoing section and proof of said compliance by the entryman under the timber-and-stone act of June 3, 1878, and acts amendatory thereof, to issue to A. W. Toreson, son and heir of Anna M. Toreson, deceased, a patent for the south half of the southwest quarter, the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter, and the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter, section 9, township 41 north, range 10 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, being the same land described in section 1 of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, if anybody can give me any information about this bill I wish they would. Anna M. Toreson took up a homestead claim, I believe, she being a very old lady, and died, leaving several children. This bill proposes to turn that right over to A. W. Toreson as the son and heir of Anna M. Toreson. What becomes of the other heirs? How do they eliminate the claim of the other heirs?

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill introduced by my colleague Mr. RAKER, who is away. I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] requests that the consideration of this bill be passed without prejudice. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

JOHN M. OAK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17709) for the relief of John M. Oak.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John M. Oak, postmaster at Bangor, Me., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $110,184.85, for postal funds, key-deposit funds, postage stamps and other stamped paper, and such further sum as shall be ascertained to have been lost from money-order funds, on account of losses resulting from fire April 30, 1911.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of John M. Oak, postmaster at Bangor, Me., in the sum of $132,311.12, due to the United States on account of postal funds, key-deposit funds, money-order funds, postage stamps, and other stamped paper on account of losses resulting from fire April 30, 1911."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ANTONIA SOUSA, DECEASED.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2070) for the relief of the estate of Antonia Sousa, deceased.

The bill was read, with a committee amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Let the bill go over, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

REFUND TO THE SPARROW GRAVELY TOBACCO CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18213) to refund to the Sparrow Gravely Tobacco Co. the sum of $173.52, with penalty and interest, the same having been erroneously paid by them to the Government of the United States.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Whereas heretofore, to wit, in the month of June, 1908, a tax of $173.52 was assessed against the Sparrow Gravely Tobacco Co. by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the western district of Virginia, the same being for a deficiency in the account of the said company for the year 1907; and

Whereas this assessment was by reason of the fact that the said company had erroneously omitted to include in their inventory for January 1, 1908, 1 hogshead of scrap tobacco; and

Whereas this omission was an honest error on the part of the said company, which the Internal Revenue Department did not allow them to correct by means of an amended inventory; and

Whereas as the result of this error on the part of the said company, and the refusal of the department to allow the same to be corrected, the said company has been compelled to pay to the Government the above assessment, with penalty and interest, which said amount was in excess of what was actually due from the said company to the Government: Now therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the said sum of $173.52, with interest and penalty, is hereby directed to be refunded to the said Sparrow Gravely Tobacco Co. from the Treasury of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—I shall not object, for I think it is a very meritorious proposition—it will not do any particular good to pass the bill. It does not purport to appropriate any money for the payment of the claim.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I know nothing about this bill; but I want to call attention to a state of facts with reference to men and small corporations that are not subject to the corporation tax that have failed by a day or two, and sometimes by a week, to make a return, and have been assessed under a penalty ranging from $25 up. There is no means by which those people have been able to secure relief from that penalty. This appears to have been a fault or mistake by the owners of this tobacco, or whatever it was, in making the returns.

A bill has been pending before the Committee on Ways and Means for a year, in which an effort has been made to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle or compromise these penalties against these corporations all over the country which are not subject to the corporation tax and who have failed to make the returns in time showing that they are not subject. There are now 30,000 cases of this kind in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue awaiting treatment.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that, of course, irrespective of that, in this particular case there was a mere error of a clerk in adding up the figures on the inventory. There was no negligence on the part of anybody whatever.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, in lines 14 and 15, strike out the words "one hogshead of scrap tobacco," and insert in lieu thereof the words "one bin of plug tobacco in process."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 3 and 4, strike out the words "$173.52, with interest and penalty," and insert in lieu thereof "$76.90."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY, Mr. POU, and Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi rose.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I want to offer an amendment to this bill before it is finally disposed of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will send the amendment to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. POU. If the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] will by unanimous consent go ahead, I will ask unanimous consent to recur to this bill after the gentleman from Virginia finishes.

ROBERT H. PECK.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, a moment ago a bill for the relief of Capt. Robert H. Peck was laid aside until I could secure the bill which has passed the Senate. I have the bill now, and I ask that it be considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 6636) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Robert H. Peck a captain in the Army.

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States, in his discretion, be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint Robert H. Peck to the grade of captain of Infantry, United States Army, to take rank at the foot of the list of captains of Infantry; and that no back pay or allowances shall accrue as a result of the passage of this act; and that there shall be no increase in the total number of officers now authorized by law by reason of the passage of this act.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the House bill (No. 4569) of similar character be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

LLOYD L. R. KREBS.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, while the gentleman from North Carolina is arranging his amendment——

Mr. POU. I will say to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] it was a little difficult to get this amendment in proper shape, and I will ask that the call of the calendar proceed until I have it completed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the bill under consideration will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. MANN. What bill is it?

Mr. BARTLETT. A tobacco bill.

Mr. HAY. It is a bill which was just passed over.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] a moment ago objected to the House bill 7142, for the relief of Lloyd L. R. Krebs. The gentleman now states that he will withdraw his objection if I will state that, in my judgment, this is a bill that ought to be passed and is of very great merit. I want to say that I so regard it, and I have no personal interest in it or connection whatever with the parties interested. And, as the gentleman does not object, I hope the bill will be passed. It has already been read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7142) authorizing the President to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Lloyd L. R. Krebs, late a captain in the Medical Corps of the United States Army, a major in the Medical Corps on the retired list, and increasing the retired list by one for the purposes of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

I. S. ROGERS AND J. L. WORTHLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7650) for the relief of I. S. Rogers and J. L. Worthley.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $1,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse I. S. Rogers and J. L. Worthley for money paid to the proper officers of the court as bondsmen for U. G. Copeland, indicted for violating section 5438 of the Revised Statutes, who was afterwards, to wit, on the 16th day of April, 1910, duly tried and convicted in the District Court of the United States for the Western Division of the Eastern District of Arkansas for his offense and sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor in the United States penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga., for a period of five years, the said I. S. Rogers and J. L. Worthley rendering material aid to the Government in the apprehension and prosecution of the said U. G. Copeland.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON], who introduced the bill, for a short statement in reference to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON] is not present.

Mr. CANDLER. The gentleman is temporarily absent from the city; otherwise, I think he would be here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out the words "one thousand" and insert in lieu thereof "seven hundred and fifty."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

COWDEN & COWDEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17850) to pay Cowden & Cowden, of Amory, Monroe County, Miss., for the loss of a horse while being used by the Department of Agriculture.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17850) to pay Cowden & Cowden, of Amory, Monroe County, Miss., for the loss of a horse while being used by the Department of Agriculture.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Cowden & Cowden, of Amory, Monroe County, Miss., the sum of $200 for a horse that died while in use by employees of the Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman what good it would do to pass the bill, there being no appropriation in it? Second, why the Government should have to pay for the loss of a horse. It says that it was the result of the improper use and the neglect of one of the employees of the Agricultural Department. Why do you not require the employee to pay for the horse he killed through improper use and neglect?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object. I would like to hear from the gentleman from Tombigbee. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANDLER. The facts in relation to this bill were fully submitted to the Agricultural Department and thoroughly considered by the Secretary of that department. He recommended, as is contained in the report, that a reasonable sum be appropriated to pay for the horse.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that the committee ought to comply with that recommendation and put an appropriation in the bill? If you pass this bill 40 times it would not give the man any money.

Mr. CANDLER. That can be avoided very easily.

Mr. MANN. It can not be avoided unless an amendment is offered.

The Clerk read the following amendment:

On page 1, line 5, strike out the words "two hundred" and insert the words "one hundred and thirty-five."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "pay," insert the words "out of any money not otherwise appropriated."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

LLOYD L. R. KREBS.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, since the bill H. R. 7142, in relation to appointing Lloyd L. R. Krebs a captain in the Medical Corps, was passed, I have in my hand now a similar bill passed by the Senate. I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings with reference to that bill may be vacated and that the Committee on Military Affairs may be discharged from the consideration of the Senate bill, and that the Senate bill be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

An act (S. 1337) authorizing the President to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Lloyd L. R. Krebs, late a captain in the Medical Corps of the United States Army, a major in the Medical Corps on the retired list, and increasing the retired list by one for the purposes of this act.

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Lloyd L. R. Krebs, late a captain in the Medical Corps of the United States Army, to be a major of the Medical Corps on the retired list of the Army. And the retired list is hereby increased by one for the purposes of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The bill H. R. 7142 was ordered to lie on the table.

J. M. H. MELLON AND OTHERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 20873) for the relief of J. M. H. Mellon, administrator, James A. Mellon, Thomas D. Mellon, Mrs. E. L. Sevird, J. M. H. Mellon, Bessie Blue, Mrs Simpson, Annie Turley, C. B. Eyler, Luella C. Pearce, John McCracken, A. J. Mellon, J. J. Marlin, Eugene Richmond, Springdale Methodist Episcopal Church, Heidekamp Mirror Co., James P. Confer, jr., W. P. Bigley, W. J. Bole, and S. A. Moyer, all of Allegheny County, Pa.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, with interest thereon from July 1, 1907, to J. M. H. Mellon, administrator, the sum of $3,001.52, to James A. Mellon the sum of $2,002.70, to Thomas D. Mellon the sum of $1,258.03, to Mrs. E. L. Sevird the sum of $366.75, to J. M. H. Mellon the sum of $151, to Bessie Blue the sum of $75, to Mrs. Simpson the sum of $13.80, to Annie Turley the sum of $47.15, to C. B. Eyler the sum of $437, to Luella C. Pearce the sum of $918.70, to John McCracken the sum of $63.25, to A. J. Mellon the sum of $821.84, to J. J. Marlin the sum of $51.75, to Eugene Richmond the sum of $36.80, to the Springdale Methodist Episcopal Church the sum of $270, to Heidekamp Mirror Co. the sum of $7,057.21, to James P. Confer, jr., the sum of $28.75, to W. P. Bigley the sum of $552, to W. J. Bole the sum of $330.75, and to S. A. Moyer the sum of $34.50, as compensation for the injuries sustained by them by reason of a flood in the Allegheny River in January, 1907, said principal sums being the amounts recommended to be paid the parties herein named by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

The following committee amendments were read:

Page 2, line 3, strike out the name "Sevird" and insert in lieu thereof the name "Siverd."

Page 2, line 14, strike out the name "Marlin" and insert in lieu thereof the name "Martin."

Page 2, after the word "cents," in line 24, insert the following: "and Albert Weiss the sum of $59.38."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

SPARROW-GRAVELY TOBACCO CO.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Calendar No. 102, the bill (H. R. 18213) to refund to the Sparrow-Gravely Tobacco Co. moneys erroneously paid for the purpose of altering an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 5 and 6, strike out the words "directed to be refunded to be" and insert in lieu thereof the words "appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and reimburse."

And, in lines 6 and 7, strike out the words "from the Treasury of the United States" and insert the words "the sum aforesaid having been erroneously paid by said company to the United States Government."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN C. SULLIVAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18294) for the relief of John C. Sullivan.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

HENRY W. CARPENTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12476) for the relief of Henry W. Carpenter.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Let it go over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

HARRY S. WADE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15181) for the relief of Harry S. Wade.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask a question. Is the man not entitled to receive or has he received compensation under the general compensation act?

Mr. LAFFERTY. He is entitled to receive compensation for one year at the rate of $53 a month, which will amount to $636.

Mr. MANN. He is entitled to receive compensation under the general act.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Not compensation in full, but $636.

Mr. MANN. Whatever it is.

Mr. LAFFERTY. The fact is that this young man——

Mr. MANN. I do not propose the facts at this time. The fact is that this is the first bill that has been reported in which it is proposed to pay a man for personal injuries where he already had received compensation under the original act. If this bill passes, every man who receives an injury under the Government, having received some compensation, will thereupon ask a Member of Congress to introduce a bill for him. It will require discussion at some other time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Let it go over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

THEODORE SALUS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13938) for the relief of Theodore Salus.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Theodore Salus, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 for the loss of his eyes and other physical injuries received by him in an explosion at Agana, Island of Guam, on February 12, 1906, while he was in the employ of the Government of the United States and in the discharge of his duties as a foreman of labor at the town of Agana, Island of Guam, as aforesaid.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 6, strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MARY E. QUINN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 644) for the relief of Mary E. Quinn.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Mary E. Quinn, whose husband, James H. Quinn, was fatally injured by an accident at the Watertown Arsenal, Watertown, Mass., on July 10, 1905, out of the Treasury of the United States, from any money not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Line 7, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "three."

Line 9, strike out the words "five thousand" and insert the words "one thousand five hundred."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the committee, I see, reports an amendment to strike out $5,000 and insert in lieu thereof $1,500. I shall take my chances on that amendment being agreed to in the absence of my genial friend from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN JOHNSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14333) for the relief of John Johnson.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John Johnson, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000, which sum is hereby appropriated, for permanent injuries sustained by said John Johnson at White Shoals Government Light Station, Lake Michigan, first district, on June 29, 1909.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 6, strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "one."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendments, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 9, strike out the words "first district," and in line 8 strike out the word "Government."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

FRANK WENZEL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16621) for the indemnification of Frank Wenzel.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Frank Wenzel, former employee of the Treasury Department, the sum of $5,000, to indemnify him for permanent personal injuries received by him December 6, 1895, by reason of the defective condition and management of the passenger elevator in the Government building in the city of Toledo, county of Lucas, and State of Ohio.

With the following committee amendment:

Lines 6 and 7, strike out the words "five thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "seven hundred and fifty."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the spelling of the word "Toledo," in line 11, corrected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 11, correct the spelling of the word "Toledo."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

H. C. OWENS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 22863) for the relief of H. C. Owens.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $10,000, for the benefit of H. C. Owens, who lost his eye as the result of injuries received on the 30th day of April, 1908, by being struck by the arm of a steam shovel on a train of the Isthmian Canal Commission, at San Pablo Cabin, belonging to the United States and being operated on the Panama Railroad at San Pablo Cabin, in the Canal Zone, be hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be paid to H. C. Owens by the Secretary of the Treasury immediately upon the approval of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 3, strike out the words "ten thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "two thousand five hundred."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask a question. The general law on this subject became a law on May 30, 1908. This man was injured on April 30, 1908, which is 30 days before the general law took effect. If he had been injured 31 days after he was he would have received compensation under the general law. Is the gentleman prepared to say how much that would be?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to say exactly how much it would be. I presume it would be a year's pay, whatever that would be. I do not know what the pay per month was.

Mr. MANN. I will ask the gentleman whether, irrespective of this case, he believes it ought to be the policy of the Government, when it passes a law beneficent in its purpose and a man could secure compensation under that, to pay him twice as much because the accident happened just before the law took effect?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, in response to that I want to say that it is doubtful in my mind whether this man would have been entitled to compensation even though he had been injured, as the gentleman from Illinois suggests, 31 days later, because the circumstances of this case are peculiar. This man was in the employ of the Panama Railroad. He was injured not through any fault of any employee of the Panama Railroad, so he has no relief as against the railroad company. He was injured through the negligence of certain people in the employ of the Isthmian Canal Commission.

Mr. MANN. The railroad can pay him. The claim is, however, that he was injured by the Government.

Mr. WILLIS. He was injured by the employees of the Isthmian Canal Commission. This man has entirely lost his sight. He was a conductor, a railroad man, before he went on the Isthmus, and since coming back has been unable, of course, to secure employment in that work. He is totally and permanently disabled for that kind of work. It seems to me, in view of that, that the allowance made by the committee of $2,500 for the total loss of sight is not unreasonable.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can go out here to various institutions and find many people who are totally disabled. He can find plenty of people in the District of Columbia who are totally disabled as far as eyesight is concerned, and yet I have not heard that that was a reason why the Government should make appropriations in order to pay them. There is no pretense in this case, I can see, that anybody was negligent in the matter.

Mr. WILLIS. Oh, yes; I think I can show the gentleman——

Mr. MANN. I have been over the record thoroughly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the gentleman will not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears none.

The Clerk reported the committee amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out the words "ten thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "two thousand five hundred."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

TRANQUILINO LUNA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19819) to authorize the payment of $2,000 to the widow of the late Tranquilino Luna, in full for his contest expenses in the contested-election case of Manzanares against Luna.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Let the bill go over.

WILLIAM F. NORRIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3668) for the relief of William F. Norris.

The bill was read.

Mr. MANN. Let the bill go over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

SLAVO RAMADANOVITCH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 462) for the relief of Slavo Ramadanovitch, of Cettigne, a Montenegrin subject, heir and administrator of Marcus Ramadanovitch, alias Radich, deceased.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Slavo Ramadanovitch, of Cettigne, a Montenegrin subject, heir and administrator of Marcus Ramadanovitch, alias Radich, deceased, formerly a Montenegrin subject, the sum of $6,396, recommended by the President in his message to Congress dated July 5, 1909.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I do not think there is very much merit in this bill. It has been recommended by several Secretaries of State; however, I am not going to object.

Mr. POU. I will state to the gentleman that the committee gave this bill very careful consideration, and I do not hesitate to say it is an entirely meritorious bill, so much so that the President of the United States felt constrained to recommend the appropriation of this money in a message, and the committee thinks it will promote the relations between the two countries if the recommendation of the President be followed.

Mr. MANN. I believe this bill is the result of the pernicious, if not the persistent, activities of some of the gentlemen who represent foreign countries here and have little else to do. They got a report from the Secretary of State and got a message from the President. I do not think there is any merit in the bill, but if it tends to promote foreign relations, which I do not think it does, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, just a moment. When was this message from the President sent to Congress?

Mr. POU. In 1909. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois it is perfectly clear——

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman wants to argue the facts, I am perfectly willing to do so, but I have not objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

RALPH E. HESS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12131) for the reimbursement of Ralph E. Hess for two horses lost while hired by the United States Geological Survey.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Ralph E. Hess, of Visalia, Cal., the sum of $150 in compensation for two horses lost while hired by the United States Geological Survey.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, this bill is for the pay of those horses that got away and were never heard of since. They must have been very valuable horses, because I see they got $15 for 30 days' use of them. Does the committee know whether that is the full amount for the two horses?

Mr. MANN. The evidence showed this man hired these from some sort of a relative, and that if he had hired them from somebody else it would have cost a great deal more money. I was wondering why these two horses were figured at $150 in California, when we have just provided $135 for one in Mississippi.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MARY J. MANNING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7672) for the relief of Mary J. Manning.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Mary J. Manning the sum of $334.49, being the amount of money paid by J. H. Mitchell as surety on the bail bond of one Thad Manning, which money was paid under a mistake of fact, the said Thad Manning being dead at the date for which judgment was rendered against his said surety, the said money having been collected by said J. H. Mitchell from said Mary J. Manning, the widow of said Thad Manning, by the sale of certain of her property, which had been conveyed by mortgage for the purpose of indemnifying the said surety, J. H. Mitchell.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM B. TAYLOR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 21760) for the relief of the estate of William B. Taylor.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have that bill go over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

SAMUEL BUTTER & CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 20511) for the relief of Samuel Butter & Co.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Let it go over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ROBERT F. SCOTT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17355) for the relief of Robert F. Scott.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Let the bill go over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

HEIRS OF VICTIMS OF FORT LAFAYETTE EXPLOSION.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15594) for the relief of the heirs of those killed in the explosion at Fort Lafayette, February 19, 1903.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the heirs and legal representatives of those who were killed in the employ of the United States in the discharge of their duties on the 19th day of February, 1903, at Fort Lafayette, in the harbor of New York, by the explosion of an 8-inch shell, the respective sums hereinafter stated, being a sum equal to one year's pay, or a part thereof, at the rate of compensation paid the injured employee at the time of his injury, the same being in full, and the receipt of the same being taken and accepted in each case as full and final release and discharge of the respective claims, namely:

To pay $895.20 to the heirs or legal representatives of William Van Gurp.

To pay $895.20 to the heirs or legal representatives of Gustav Doser.

To pay $895 to the heirs or legal representatives of John Mason.

To pay $895.20 to the heirs or legal representatives of Frederick Munder.

To pay $730 to the heirs or legal representatives of James Clancey.

To pay $1,209.60 to the heirs or legal representatives of John Rother: Provided, That where the deceased left a widow and children the widow shall receive one-half, and the children shall share alike.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask some gentleman in reference to this bill. It just provides for the payment of money to the heirs and legal representatives of those who were killed. That is general language. If the legal representatives are heirs, that possibly could be done, but I do not see how it could be. Then, when it gets over in the bill farther it names the amounts and provides that the money shall be paid to the heirs of the legal representatives. A legal representative should be the administrator. If this is paid to the legal representatives, it may be applied in the payment of a debt——

Mr. CANNON. Ought not "legal representatives" be stricken out all through?

Mr. MANN. I am calling this to the attention of the House in the hope that whoever is interested in the bill before it gets through and is made a law will have it fixed so that somebody can have the money. I do not think the department will be entitled to determine.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield? Have we ever appropriated in these injury cases to pay the debts of the party?

Mr. MANN. We never have attempted to do that. I guess it would be as well to strike out "legal representatives" and do it the other way.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There would be no objection to that as far as that is concerned.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out, on page 1, line 5, the words "and legal representatives."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, lines 5 and 6, by striking out the words "and legal representatives."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Then I move to strike out, on page 2, wherever they occur, the words "or legal representatives."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2 strike out wherever they occur the words "or legal representatives."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF SETTLERS, SHERMAN COUNTY, OREG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 295) to adjust the claims of certain settlers in Sherman County, Oreg.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I ask to have that go over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

HEIRS OF WILLIAM HANNUM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14748) to refund certain taxes paid by the heirs of William Hannum, deceased.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. This is one of the bills of the kind that we had up a while ago. There is no use in reading it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] objects.

BOLOGNESI, HARTFIELD & CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 21403) for the relief of Bolognesi, Hartfield & Co.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I think that should go over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

J. KENNARD & SONS CARPET CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4007) for the relief of the J. Kennard & Sons Carpet Co.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask that that be passed over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] objects.

JOHN T. HAINES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4778) to correct the military record of John T. Haines.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Let that go over, too.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

LEGAL HEIRS OF A. G. STRAIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2427) for the relief of the legal heirs of A. G. Strain.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and he is hereby, authorized to relinquish to the legal heirs of A. G. Strain, by proper deed of conveyance, all title which the said A. G. Strain had vested in the United States Government to the following-described lands: North half northeast quarter and north half northwest quarter, section 22, township 4 north, range 15 west, San Bernardino meridian, in the county of Los Angeles, State of California: Provided, That the said heirs of A. G. Strain make satisfactory proof of such conveyance to the United States of said land by the submission of an abstract of title, together with the deed of conveyance to the United States of the same, which said deed and abstract or abstracts shall be retained in the files of the General Land Office.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

H. C. HODGES, H. A. POWELL, JOHN SMITH, AND JOSEPH RIDLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 20692) for the relief of H. C. Hodges, H. A. Powell, John Smith, and Joseph Ridley.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have that bill go over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

H. J. RANDOLPH HEMMING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 21526) for the relief of H. J. Randolph Hemming.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I ask to have that go over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

ELLEN M. STONE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2461) to provide for the repayment of the ransom of Ellen M. Stone.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have that passed over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman to withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. MANN. For the purpose of making a speech on the bill?

Mr. SHARP. Just a moment, in which to make an explanation.

Mr. MANN. Well, that might require me to make a speech of 15 or 20 minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I would like to state that the bill has been drawn on the wrong supposition as to the parties. It will have to be remodeled anyway.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] withhold his objection?

Mr. MANN. I do not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

GEORGE P. HEARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 23080) for the relief of George P. Heard.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that that go over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

JOHN J. TROXELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5135) to correct the military record of John J. Troxell.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, usually these bills recently have given a man a pensionable status. This proposes to revoke an order which dismissed him. The fact is, the man got into a row with Gen. McCook.

Mr. GARNER. Some one has suggested that the President has vetoed a number of bills of this character.

Mr. FOSTER. He has vetoed bills where it changed the record. I have never known the President to sign a bill where it changes the record in the War Department. This provides for giving this man an honorable discharge, which he has not now.

Mr. PEPPER. It is not a case of desertion, and it is the desertion cases that have been vetoed.

Mr. FOSTER. I remember distinctly that I had a bill that passed the House twice without opposition, went through the Senate, and went to both Presidents that we have had within the last few years, and they both vetoed the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIS. The bill is in the form which I understand would meet the objections raised to the other bill. What the gentleman refers to is the objection which the Chief Executive had to attempting to falsify the record of the War Department. There is no attempt to change the record here.

Mr. MANN. Why not? It says that the order is revoked and set aside.

Mr. WILLIS. The record still stands there.

Mr. MANN. This purports to set aside the record.

Mr. GARNER. Let me ask the gentleman. The object, I suppose, is to get this man a pensionable status?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. Then why not put it in the form used recently to remove the impediment for securing a pension?

Mr. MANN. I think this bill had better go over, and I object.

GASTON LEE HOLMES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14607) authorizing the President to reinstate Gaston Lee Holmes as a midshipman in the United States Naval Academy.

Mr. MANN. Let that bill go over.

JOHN W. WEST.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6544) for the relief of the heirs of John W. West, deceased.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Let that bill go over.

LUTHER BURBANK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 23043) to patent certain semiarid lands to Luther Burbank, under certain conditions.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be set aside for a period of five years such portions of the unappropriated, nonmineral, and nonirrigable unreserved lands situated in California, New Mexico, Arizona, and Nevada as Luther Burbank, of Santa Rosa, Cal., may select, not to exceed 12 sections in all, and the right to enter the same and propagate the spineless cacti thereon, erecting all necessary improvements, and clearing and tilling the soil thereof, be granted the said Luther Burbank, his heirs, and successors in interest.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to issue patent from the United States to the said Luther Burbank, his heirs, or successors in interest, for all or any legal subdivision of the said lands so set aside upon the payment of $1.25 per acre, or $2.50 per acre if the same be reserved sections within any railroad grant, as purchase price, provided said payment is made within the said five years: Provided, That no patent shall issue until the said Luther Burbank or his heirs or successors in interest shall have had at least 100,000 growing plants of spineless cacti of a character suitable for animal food upon said lands or some part thereof for the period of two years: Provided further, That the land selected shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and that the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall certify as to the semiarid, nonmineral, nonirrigable, and unsuitable character of the said lands for agricultural purposes under present methods of agriculture before the same shall be set aside as herein provided, and that said certificate shall be conclusive as to the character of said lands.

The Clerk read the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 4, after the word "unappropriated," add a comma.

On the same line, after the word "nonmineral," strike out the word "and" and insert "nontimber." On the same line, after the word "nonirrigable," insert the word "and."

On page 1, line 5, before the word "land," insert the word "public."

On page 1, line 13, strike out the words "from the United States."

On page 2, at the end of line 10, after the word "years" and before the colon, insert the following: "and until it has been shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that the lands to be patented are suitable for the growth of spineless cacti valuable for domestic animal food."

On page 2, in line 12, strike out the words "and that" after the word "Interior" and insert the word "when."

On page 2, in line 13, strike out the words "as to the" before the word "semiarid" and insert the following words: "to the Secretary of the Interior is."

On page 2, line 14, after the word "nonirrigable," insert the words "nontimbered, unreserved," and strike out the words "the character of said land" in lines 14 and 15.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

E. ROSENWALD & BRO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 20124) for the relief of E. Rosenwald & Bro.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to E. Rosenwald & Bro. the sum of $4,922.85, which sum is hereby appropriated, being the amount of money unlawfully collected from said E. Rosenwald & Bro. upon an entry covering 186 bales of unstemmed wrapper tobacco, made upon June 1, 1909, and liquidated upon October 4, 1909.

Such liquidation was unlawfully made and said duty unlawfully levied, assessed, and collected upon 2,660.51 pounds of tobacco more than the actual amount of said entry upon proper allowance for tare.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MEETING OF THE HOUSE NEXT WEEK.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Monday next it adjourn to meet on Thursday, June 27, and that when it adjourns on Thursday, June 27, it adjourn to meet on Monday, July 1.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Monday next it be to meet on Thursday, June 27, and that when it adjourns on Thursday, June 27, it be to meet on Monday, July 1. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can we have an understanding among those who are here that the House after Monday next until the following Monday will transact no business whatever except the reading of the Journal?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And the motion to adjourn. That is the purpose. My purpose is if this is agreed to, to do that, except that on Monday next we will transact such business that may come up.

Mr. MANN. Monday is District day, and if they have any business we can transact that. Otherwise I guess we will have no business.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that under this order we will adjourn from Thursday next until the day the new fiscal year begins. Public service will stop unless some provision is made for it. It seems to me, as there is to be a practical adjournment during that time there ought to be a resolution extending the appropriations, as is usual in such case, for 15 or 30 days, as the case may be, or until further order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that as far as the House is concerned the appropriation bills are in the Senate, and the House, I think, could have disposed of the appropriation bills before the 1st day of July if the Senate had acted upon them, but the Senate has already agreed not to transact any business whatever until the 1st day of July. Therefore, if we send a resolution of the kind referred to to extend appropriations for the next fiscal year it would accomplish no result.

Mr. CANNON. Had we not better throw the responsibility on the Senate?

Mr. MANN. I would suggest to my colleague that if they desire to do that, of course, it could be done to-morrow or upon Monday.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; there is an opportunity to do so, but I do not see that anything will be accomplished by it as the Senate has already agreed to transact no business.

Mr. CANNON. It is perfectly patent that without violating the law all along the line, with the exception of here and there a permanent appropriation and with certain exceptions touching the Army and Navy, that the public service will stop unless, as I say, everybody is guilty of serious infraction of the law.

Mr. GARNER. But the point the gentleman suggests is that the Senate has agreed by unanimous consent to transact no business until the 1st day of July. A resolution of the character suggested by the gentleman from Illinois could not meet with any action on the part of the Senate under that unanimous-consent agreement. Therefore, it would be useless for us to pass that kind of a resolution at this time.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me that the resolution ought to pass. In other words, all public business stops on the 1st day of July unless an appropriation is made to continue it.

Mr. GARNER. But the Senate will meet on the 1st day of July and the House will meet on the 1st day of July. A resolution of that kind could be passed through each of them on that day, if it was deemed advisable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suppose the gentleman intends to move to adjourn after that request is agreed to?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is a unanimous-consent request over on this side, and I wish to also ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 10 o'clock, so as to accommodate certain gentlemen who have some very important business to be transacted later in the afternoon.

Mr. MANN. The business in order to-morrow ought not to take very long, and I do not see any necessity for meeting before 12 o'clock.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, we will be away from here by 4 o'clock.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the Chair to submit my request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Monday next it adjourn to meet on the following Thursday, and that when it adjourns on that day, the 27th, it adjourn to meet the following Monday, July 1. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would now like to see if I can agree with the gentleman from Illinois about meeting to-morrow morning. There is yet about a page and a half of this Private Calendar.

Mr. MANN. But that is not in order to-morrow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, yes; it is in order under the rule.

Mr. MANN. No; pension business is in order to-morrow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the pension bills are disposed of, then this would be in order.

Mr. MANN. I do not think so.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I remember very clearly the request I made that this matter should be in order, not to interfere with pension bills, on any day this week.

Mr. MANN. It is not material. I do not expect we shall spend very much time on the Private Calendar to-morrow outside of pension bills. We will have plenty of time to go through the Private Calendar before we adjourn and dispose of these matters.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I have a resolution, which I am very anxious to have passed, to send certain matters to the Court of Claims.

Mr. MANN. There is no hurry about that. That does not have to pass the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when we adjourn to-day we adjourn to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, we met this morning at 10 o'clock. I object.

OLMSTEAD LANDS, NORTH CAROLINA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the bill (H. R. 20738) for the transfer of the so-called Olmstead lands in the State of North Carolina from the Solicitor of the Treasury to the Secretary of Agriculture, with a Senate amendment thereto.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendment be agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause]. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON STEPHENS.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Hon. WILLIAM G. BRANTLEY, of Georgia, on the occasion of the unveiling of a tablet to the memory of Alexander Hamilton Stephens, of Georgia, by the Confederate Memorial Literary Society in Richmond, Va., May 22, 1912.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause]. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 17681. An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the Government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes;

H. R. 18712. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 23765. An act granting pensions and increases of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 22867. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 22194. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 20628. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 23515. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

S. J. Res. 101. Joint resolution to appoint Andrew D. White a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution;

S. 3203. An act to authorize the sale of certain lands within the Umatilla Indian Reservation to the city of Pendleton, Oreg.; and

S. 6479. An act to authorize the St. Louis Southwestern Railway Co. to repair, alter, or rebuild certain bridges in the State of Arkansas.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Saturday, June 22, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. FERRIS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 6776) for the relief of the Apache Indians held as prisoners of war on the Fort Sill Military Reservation, in Oklahoma, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 917), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOUSTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 21594) to appoint a commission to consider and report upon the general subject of the treatment of juvenile and first offenders, together with the best system of detention of Federal prisoners, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 919), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 22, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee for that never-failing providence which has shaped and guided the destiny of Thy children from savagery through barbarism to civilization; which in spite of the untoward circumstances of life, in spite of the efforts of men, unwittingly it may have been, to turn back the tide of civilization, it has steadily moved forward, and we most fervently pray that Thou wilt continue to protect, bless, and guide us that Thy kingdom may come and Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all private pension bills to be considered to-day on the calendar be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that all private pension bills that may be considered to-day shall be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill S. 6340.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

S. 6340. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER. Somebody has suggested that the Chair has neglected to put the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] to consider the bills in the House as in the Committee of the Whole, and therefore the Chair will put the request of the gentleman from Missouri over again.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Speaker was interrupted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] and has not submitted the proposition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL]?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] two or three questions. I want to know if the committee has arrived at any policy which they propose to pursue in the future in view of the fact that the President has recently signed a bill making general legislation in regard to pensions? Since that time has the gentleman arrived at any idea as to what course will be pursued in the future in regard to private pension bills?

Mr. RUSSELL. I will state that the committee has taken no official action upon that question. I can state to the gentleman, however, my own feelings about the matter if he would like to have me do so.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I think an expression of yours would be representative as coming from the committee.

Mr. RUSSELL. I will state to the gentleman that since we have passed the general pension bill there will be less demand and less necessity for private pension bills, and personally I do not favor hereafter reporting private bills for those who are beneficiaries under the general law, except in cases where they are helpless from age or disease, so as to need an attendant. That is my personal position. I believe where a man is blind, where he is crippled, or where he is bedfast and needs an attendant, he ought to have more than the amount provided by the general bill, and I shall favor bills of that sort.

And as to widows who are not affected at all by the general bill, if they have meritorious cases according to precedents heretofore adopted by Congress, I do not think that they ought to be prevented from having the same rights that they have had heretofore. That is my own feelings in the matter. [Applause.]

Mr. TRIBBLE. Does the gentleman think that this view, while it has not come formally from the committee, expresses the sentiment of the committee?

Mr. RUSSELL. I have talked with a number of the members of the committee about it, and, without binding anybody, I will say that I believe that will be the policy of the committee in the next Congress.

I want to say, however, that here is a bill that we reported to the House about a month ago, nearly all the items of which were considered by the committee before the general bill was passed, and in a great many cases the beneficiaries at home have been notified that the committee has indorsed and favorably reported their bills. Therefore I think this bill now pending in the House ought, for these reasons, to be passed, regardless of the general bill.

Mr. TRIBBLE. That is all.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] I will state that a few days ago I had official notice—that is, I mean by that it was sent by the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions—declining to report a bill which I had before the committee with the proper evidence until an application had first been made under the general law recently passed, and naturally I inferred that that would be the policy pursued by the committee in other cases, inasmuch as that was done in my case.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman thinks that will be the policy of the committee?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes, as now constituted.

Mr. SIMS. I know that is the case, so far as my bill is concerned.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL]?

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, at this particular time I would like to ask the Chair if it would be in order for me to make a correction in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The Chair will entertain the request. But I would suggest to the gentleman to wait until the Chair puts the other request. That is the way it got knocked out before. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] that pension bills that are called up to-day shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of Michael Grace, late of Company A, Thirty-fourth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. JAMES). The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 4, by striking out lines 10, 11, and 12.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama what order he is observing in calling up these bills. Naturally, under the rule they would be called up in the order they stand on the calendar.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I intended to call them up in the order that they appear on the calendar, but in regard to this one I made a mistake.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman intends to have them called up in the order that they stand on the calendar?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; but in this case I made a mistake. I am not going to omit a single one.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that he allow the bills to be called in their order on the calendar. The Chair is of the impression that that is the agreement, and that under the rule they should be called in that way.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Very well.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 24322) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of Anna J. Mellstrup, dependent mother of Elmer M. Mellstrup, late ordinary seaman, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of John H. Brown, late of the United States ship Worden, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $15 per month.

The name of Sherman A. Cole, late of Company D, Twentieth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of John A. Shannon, late of Company I, Second Regiment Alabama Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Charles B. Swinney, late of Company B, Sixth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Theodore W. Swan, late of Company G, Sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of George C. Rimes, late of Company E, Thirty-fifth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of William Ramsey, late of Troop B, United States Mounted Riflemen, War with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Mercer, as dependent father of Grover C. Mercer, late of United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of John S. Scheerer, late of the United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Wesley J. Banks, late of Company A, First Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, War with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Ronald B. Veach, late of Company A, Eleventh Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $18 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Clinton L. Coleman, late of Company L, Tenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of William M. Hanks, late of Company C, Ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of John G. Morgan, late of Sargent's company, First Regiment Georgia Volunteers, War with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lawrence Z. Hoffman, late of Company F, Tenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Rupert Haas, late of Company E, Sixth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $6 per month.

The name of Charles Myer, late of Company E, First Regiment Georgia Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob Mandelbaum, late of Troop H, Seventh Regiment United States Cavalry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month.

The name of Elizabeth S. Tinsley, widow of Alfred M. Tinsley, late of Capt. Bennett's company, First Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, War with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The above bill is a substitute for the following House bills referred to the Committee on Pensions:

H. R. 3674. Anna Mellstrup.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 4, by adding, after line 14, as a new paragraph the following:

"The name of Sarah Jane Scurlock, formerly the widow of Benjamin Franklin Gordon, late of Capt. Walton's company, First Regiment Missouri Volunteers, under Col. Doniphan, War with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, in behalf of this amendment I have no criticism whatsoever to offer of the action of the committee. I simply wish to say that the claim has been unfavorably considered by the committee, for the reason that this widow does not have in law a pensionable status at this time. The records show that the soldier served faithfully in the Mexican War and was honorably discharged, and that the person for whom this pension is asked married that soldier in 1851. The soldier served in the Confederate Army. He entered the Confederate service as a colonel of the First Missouri Confederate Infantry and continued in the service throughout the war, rising to the rank of brigadier general. In 1866, a year after the close of the war, he died. The testimony before the committee is that he died from a disease contracted in the Mexican War. His widow did not have a pensionable status on account of his service in the Confederate Army. There was no relief as against section 4716 of the Revised Statutes, which precluded a Confederate soldier or his widow from receiving a pension, until 1887, when soldiers who served in the Mexican War were relieved from the restrictions that were laid upon them for having served afterwards in the Confederate Army.

During the period from 1866 until 1873 this widow would have been entitled to a pension at the rate of $8 per month, on account of the death of her husband, because of his service in the Mexican War, if he had not served in the Confederate Army. It has been the policy of Congress to remove these restrictions upon Confederate soldiers and their widows. In 1877 this restriction was modified and again modified later, and just the other day all restrictions were removed from soldiers or their widows on account of the prior service of the soldier in the Confederate Army.

This is a singularly meritorious case. Ample proof is before the committee that this woman was born in 1829; that she has now attained the age of 83 years; that her husband served faithfully in the Mexican War. She remarried in 1873, and in 1889 on account of family difficulties, on account of her children and on account of her husband being utterly unworthy, as the record shows, she secured a legal separation from him. I therefore ask that this amendment be agreed to, not, as I say, in any spirit of criticism of the committee, because I believe the committee has worked faithfully and has observed its rules, but because the rules of the committee are too strict.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute longer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to say that this is one of the cases that is meritorious, and I ask that the committee accept this amendment and that the House agree to it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Kansas that I took the liberty of inclosing to him the rules governing our committee, and I have no doubt that he received and read them. Rule VIII requires that consideration be not given to any bill proposing to restore to the roll the name of a widow whose pension was forfeited by remarriage unless she was the wife of the soldier or sailor during his service. While it is true that this rule is not applicable to this case, it is governed by the same principle, for she was not his wife until after his service. The fact is that at the time the widow made the application for a pension, or afterwards, she was the widow of another and different man. She had remarried and did not at all have a pensionable status and, according to the rule as properly construed, we could not allow her pension.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Kansas does not deny that she remarried and had separated from her last husband, and at the time she made the application for a pension her former husband, whom the gentleman says had been in the Confederate Army, had been dead for many years. She had no pensionable status at all. The committee unanimously, under these circumstances, refused to allow the pension.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. TAGGART. Does the gentleman insist on applying that part of the rules about a widow of a Mexican soldier which provides that she could not be placed on the pension roll unless she was married to the soldier at the time of the Mexican War?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is the rule and that is the law.

Mr. TAGGART. Does not that rule become absurd because of lapse of time, inasmuch as it is nearly 70 years since that war began? The widow would necessarily be in the neighborhood of 100 years of age in order to have that rule apply.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But this widow did exactly what the rules provide should not be done in order to secure a pension——

Mr. TAGGART. Did she not save the Government of the United States the amount of a pension of $8 a month during the whole interim?

Mr. RICHARDSON. And we very reluctantly declined to grant the pension.

Mr. TAGGART. It surely is not the desire of the gentleman's committee to punish her for having practiced economy in behalf of the Government.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I must object to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, we pass in the course of a session of Congress several thousand pension bills, considering each item as a different bill, although the custom is now to pass them in the form of omnibus bills. It never has been the custom in the House to pass pension bills without their having been considered by a committee. The gentleman's amendment is practically to pass a pension bill without a report from the committee. I am unwilling that a precedent of that sort should be set in the House without at least a considerable membership of the House being present at the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TAGGART) there were—ayes 6, noes 18.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 24796) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of Joseph W. Wightman, late fireman, second class, of the United States Navy, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $15 per month.

The name of Jesse B. Haptonstall, late of Capt. Williams's company, Second Regiment Washington Territory Volunteers, Oregon and Washington Territory Indian War, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George E. Matthews, late of Company L, Seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Lemuel E. Whitsitt, late of Company E, One hundred and sixty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Delia Johnson, widow of Willis Johnson, late of Battery B, Second Regiment United States Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Louis G. Murray, late of Battery D, Fourth Regiment United States Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Robert Cornell, alias Robert Conners, late of Company B, Twenty-second Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The above bill is a substitute for the following House bills referred to the Committee on Pensions:

H. R. 6019. Joseph W. Wightman.	H. R. 18532. Delia Johnson.
H. R. 7230. Jesse B. Haptonstall.	H. R. 22387. Louis G. Murray.
H. R. 13520. George E. Matthews.	H. R. 23484. Robert Cornell, alias Robert Conners.
H. R. 18350. Lemuel E. Whitsitt.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 24996) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of Pryor G. Guseman, late of Company H, First Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elizabeth L. Bayless, widow of James M. Bayless, late of Troop E, Eighth Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, with an additional allowance of $2 per month on account of each of four minor children of the soldier until they, respectively, reach the age of 16 years.

The name of Ann Livingston, dependent mother of Robert E. Livingston, late of Company K, Thirty-second Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of James W. Fisher, late of Company H, Eighth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of John H. Brogan, late of the United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Virginia L. Duplan, widow of Melchior Long Duplan, late of Battery C, Third Regiment United States Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The above bill is a substitute for the following House bills referred to the Committee on Pensions:

H. R. 193. Pryor G. Guseman.	H. R. 14436. James W. Fisher.
H. R. 6978. Elizabeth L. Bayless.	H. R. 17089. John H. Brogan.
H. R. 13745. Ann Livingston.	H. R. 19011. Virginia L. Duplan.

Mr. MANN. What has become of the invalid pension bills?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that they have been waiting for the gentleman from Alabama to conclude, and then the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] is going to call those bills up.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing that should be done by consent of the House, but not by private consent. If the gentleman wants to ask unanimous consent to pass over these bills——

Mr. RUSSELL. It was done to accommodate the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. MANN. Let the gentleman make the request.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I asked that in the beginning. Does the gentleman wish me to ask that for every one?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I agreed with the gentleman from Alabama to let him finish his bills, as he is very anxious to get away, having some friends in town, and I ask unanimous consent that bills from the Pensions Committee be first considered, before the bills from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that bills reported from the Pensions Committee be first considered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 6851) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

ANNIE R. SCHLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4568) granting an increase of pension to Annie R. Schley.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Annie R. Schley, widow of Winfield S. Schley, late rear admiral, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $150 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 1, by striking out the words "one hundred and."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move a substitute for the committee amendment by striking out "one hundred and fifty" and inserting "seventy-five."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the committee amendment on page 2 by striking out the words "one hundred and fifty" and inserting the word "seventy-five."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the Senate passed this bill at $150 a month. I understand the rule is $50 a month. I think the committee acted properly in recommending only $50 a month. Without argument, as I do not intend to take the time for a discussion, I think that the circumstances justify at least some increase over the ordinary amount, and therefore I have offered the substitute to make it $75 a month.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I am obliged to object to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], because it violates the principle upon which the Pension Committee acted, and I can only say that in view of the fact that the Senate had allowed Mrs. Schley $100 over and above what the Pension Committee of the Senate allowed, which was only $50, and gave its reasons for it, the Pension Committee of the House followed the policy of the Pension Committee of the Senate and placed the amount to Mrs. Schley at $50.

I can say to the House now that within 24 hours after the Senate passed that amendment on the floor of the Senate giving Mrs. Schley $150 there were two very worthy and deserving ladies, the widows of distinguished soldiers, who came to me in person and said, "Well, if that has been done, why can not you and the committee do likewise to us and increase our pension?" And that is the custom. That is what the Senate committee provided for Mrs. Schley, namely, $50, and gave strong and convincing reasons for it. And I hold in my hand a large number of names of widows of distinguished officers of the Civil War and of the Spanish-American War where that proceeding was taken. The amount given is more in the nature of a bonus than strictly a pension, and why it should be departed from on account of one deserving widow rather than another I can not understand. I do not think it is right or proper to make that discrimination or that distinction between those widows of distinguished officers. Therefore our committee unanimously concurred with the Senate committee on that subject and differed with the vote taken on the floor of the Senate giving Mrs. Schley $150 instead of $50. And therefore I think the substitute giving her $75 instead of $150 is a total departure from our rule; and if you can depart from it and give $75 to one, there is just a good excuse and the gate is open to give any amount the House or the committee may please.

Mr. BATHRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. BATHRICK. I desire to know as to this rule which you say has prevailed in the Pension Committee regarding the amount intended to be given to widows under these circumstances——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Also having regard to their financial condition, of course.

Mr. BATHRICK (continuing). Have you taken into consideration the fact that Admiral Schley gave to this country extraordinary service, and the service given to the country by husbands of these other widows have not been so extraordinary?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will say that I was just as much an admirer as anybody in this country of the grand services rendered by Admiral Schley, of the great victories he won for our country, but that is not the question at all that governs in making our decision in a case like this. There are rules which govern our committee and the Senate committee, and it is our imperative duty to abide by and maintain these rules. Any other course opens wide the field of personal partialities. You can understand very well how the Senate, on the floor, under impulse and excitement and feeling and impassioned oratory, departed from the honored custom. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the substitute of the gentleman from Illinois, to strike out "fifty" and insert "seventy-five," in line 1, page 2.

The question was taken, and the substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 6978) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of Grant Noble, late of Company D, Sixteenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Edward F. Shaughnessy, late of Company B, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Gust Carlson, late of Battery B, Utah Volunteer Light Artillery, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $10 per month.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read the first committee amendment, as follows:

Amend, page 2, by striking out all of lines 5 to 7, inclusive.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, by striking out all of lines 8 to 11, inclusive.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to be heard with reference to this amendment, which strikes out the name of Ira Howell. I do not question the other two amendments—the one which has been adopted, and the one which remains to be acted upon—but I desire to oppose this amendment.

This young man, Ira Howell, was a Spanish-American soldier and he served a year and a half in the Army, and during nearly all that period of time he was in the Philippine Islands. He was a perfectly sound man when he enlisted and he is pensioned now at the rate of $6 a month for lumbago. He filed his claim in the bureau for a pension on account of rheumatism and malarial poisoning, but the Pension Bureau declined to grant his application on this account upon the theory that he could not trace these disabilities to the service.

The medical records on file in the War Department show that during the time he was a soldier he was treated for various injuries and disabilities contracted in the service—contusion of the right knee and bronchitis and acute diarrhea and acute lumbago; and the last time he was examined they rated him at $6 per month. He is getting $6 per month now. The medical board rated him at $6 for disease of the rectum, which the bureau did not allow.

There is an abundance of evidence on file as to the incurrence of his disabilities while in the service, and I think, from an examination of this Senate report and from the evidence, that this is about as worthy a claim as is embraced in this entire Senate bill. The Senate committee awarded him $12 a month and the House committee has stricken it out, upon what theory I do not know, except that perhaps he could go back to the Pension Bureau and pass another examination and possibly get more.

He has tried that repeatedly, and $6 is all they have awarded him. He can trace to the satisfaction of the bureau but one of these injuries back to the service, but the evidence at least tends to show that he contracted them all in the service. He is a farmer, but he can not work at his calling. He is compelled to do light work to make a living.

I think this committee ought not to recommend this amendment, and I insist that the House should retain the item at the amount fixed by the Senate, namely, $12 a month.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Illinois states that the war records show there was no pensionable disability connected with the soldier's service.

Mr. RAINEY. No; I did not say that. The medical records show that his disabilities were connected with service. He is receiving only $6.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I remember the case, and the committee examined into the case with great care, but we thought that the disability for which he claimed additional pension was not connected with the service. That is the theory of the Pension Committee. The committee demands and requires the disability to be shown to have its origin in the service; otherwise, there is no pensionable status.

Mr. RAINEY. But the Senate Pension Committee, after an equally careful examination, found otherwise, and gave him $12 a month. It is a small matter to give to a Spanish-American War veteran who is suffering from pensionable diseases and disabilities traceable to his service a pension of $12 a month when it is shown that he is incapacitated for pursuing the occupation in which he formerly made his living. It is not much to ask that he should receive $12 a month. I think the gentleman and his committee ought not to insist on the amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Illinois admits that the applicant has been before the Bureau of Pensions and each time his disabilities have been rated at $6. He has been before the bureau several times, and his claims for an increase have been rejected.

Mr. RAINEY. There is no reason at all for the existence of this Pension Committee in this House if they turn down an application for pension simply because it has been rejected by the Pension Bureau.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Oh, I did not say that, and I did not pretend to say it. There is not a pension claim in this bill that has not been rejected by the Pension Bureau on the amount they are claiming.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read the next committee amendment, as follows:

Amend, page 2, by striking out lines 12 and 13.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard respecting that amendment. The Senate inserted in the bill a provision to pension Jethro J. T. Garde, who enlisted in 1876 and served to September, 1877. He contracted a disease of the eyes, and later, after spending some time in the hospital, was discharged, and the surgeon of the regiment, George M. Sternberg, made the following observation on his condition:

Glaucoma: His vision is very imperfect and is becoming worse every day. Disease contracted since enlistment. Disability one-half. Operation of iridectomy proposed to patient and declined by him.

Following that he was discharged, and he applied for a pension, as the records show, and was rejected by the department because "a ratable degree of disability had not been shown since the date of filing on account of disease of the eye."

There is evidence shown, supported by affidavits by doctors, that he has suffered from an ailment of the optic nerve of the right eye, and that it is of such a character as to prevent him from performing any continuous labor. He is otherwise in poor health and has the responsibilities of a family resting upon him that makes his condition an exceptional one, and one that ought to appeal to this House.

Among other conditions he has a child in his home who is afflicted with tuberculosis, and that is an additional burden thereby imposed upon him, and it would seem that that should be an argument in favor of granting the small pension that has been recognized by the Senate to this old soldier. He is a man 64 years of age, is deserving in every way, and I submit that the amendment that has been proposed by the committee to the bill of the Senate ought not to prevail.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, the Pension Committee could not go outside and consider children under certain circumstances mentioned by the gentleman unless they are properly brought within the jurisdiction of the Pension Committee. My recollection—and it is very hard to recollect all these cases, there are so many brought before the committee—but my recollection is that the last statement made about it, the certificate of the doctors that examined him afterwards and examined him last, found that his vision had improved wonderfully and that he was not suffering at all, and the Pension Committee considered the disability was not connected sufficiently with the service.

Mr. FRENCH. It was shown that he was discharged on account of this disability connected with his eyes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; but his eyes were well, and his sight was practically restored.

Mr. FRENCH. He was regarded when discharged as one-half disabled, and now he has an ailment of the optic nerve, and he is not able to perform any continuous work. It is a reasonable presumption, a presumption concurred in by the Senate committee, that the condition of the eyes at this time is the result of the condition at the time of the discharge, and is thereby connected with the service.

Mr. RICHARDSON. My recollection about it is that the Pension Committee looked into this, carefully read all the evidence, as it does always in these cases, and they made a report that the disability was not connected with the service; and hence we turned it down, although the Senate had passed it. We have to do that when we consider that the disability is not connected with the service. I have not heard any satisfactory statement made by the gentleman that it is connected with the service.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the discussion has been carried on in such a low tone that we on this side do not know what this amendment is or what it is about.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, by striking out lines 12, 13, and 14.

Mr. MANN. Is it a committee amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The amended Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 25304) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of William H. Eoute, late of Companies H and L, Tenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $10 per month.

The name of Paul Heineman, late cook, third class, of the U. S. S. Charleston, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Jay W. Ducatt, late of Company I, First Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Oliver J. Johnson, late of Company D, Third Regiment Virginia Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Clara G. Stoney, widow of James M. Stoney, late of Company G, Thirty-second Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, and $2 per month additional on account of one minor child of the soldier until such child shall reach the age of 16 years.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5176) granting a pension to Elizabeth B. Preston.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth B. Preston, widow of William B. Preston, late captain Company I, Forty-third Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN WAR SURVIVORS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up now the bill (H. R. 14053) to increase the pensions of Indian war survivors in certain cases.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman that that is a bill which is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to suspend the rules and take up this bill and consider it at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to suspend the rules to take up the bill referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I regret that I shall have to object.

Mr. MANN. Is not that bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MANN. We have a very distinct understanding in the House and the gentleman ought not to press that.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will not the gentleman permit me to explain the bill?

Mr. MANN. I know what the bill is. I am in favor of the bill, but I object to taking it up in this irregular way. The gentleman must understand he has no right to take it up at this time under the order under which we are operating to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 14, strike out lines 17 to 20 inclusive, the beneficiary being Mary J. Chick.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out on page 8, lines 19, 20, 21, and 22, as the beneficiary, Eli K. Simonds, is dead.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 6369) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

An act (S. 6369) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of Julius A. Pherson, late of Troop L, First Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

During the reading of the bill,

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker, on page 6, line 20, appears the name of Sylvanus G. Peffle. It should be P-e-p-p-l-e instead of P-e-f-f-l-e.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 20, change the name of "Peffle" to "Pepple."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a committee amendment. On page 18, line 10, strike out the word "twenty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-six."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 73, line 10, strike out the letter "J" and insert the letter "L" in lieu thereof.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

At the conclusion of the reading of the bill,

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the bill as a new paragraph the following:

"The name of John Howell, late of Company H, Second Regiment Tennessee Mounted Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, this is the first time this committee has ever permitted a new item to be added to a bill in the House, or attempted to do so. We have consented to do this for the reason that by an error, though authorized, it was not placed in this bill, and for the further reason that this party is now 80 years of age, has had long and honorable service, and is totally blind, and the committee has authorized me to offer this amendment.

Mr. MANN. Is this amendment offered at the suggestion of the Senate committee?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; this is a House bill, and it is offered at the suggestion of the House committee.

Mr. ADAIR. As I understand, this was favorably acted upon by the committee, but through an inadvertence was omitted from the bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. This bill had a favorable report from the examiner, favorably acted upon by the committee, but by some error it was not included in the list of items. This man is totally blind, and it ought to be allowed to him, anyway.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, at the end of the bill, by inserting the following:

"Provided, That the name of no person contained in this act shall be placed on the pension roll who has filed application for increase of pension under act of Congress relating to the granting of pensions, passed on the 11th day of May, 1912, or who is entitled under said act to a pension or an increase of pension thereunder: Provided further, That for the purpose of carrying into effect the foregoing provision the Commissioner of Pensions shall certify to the Secretary of the Interior such names as are qualified to be placed on the pension roll under this act, and for such purposes the decision and certificate of the Commissioner of Pensions shall be conclusive and final."

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I offer that amendment in perfect good faith. I do not care to make any extended remarks on it. It seems to me this bill ought to be revised by the committee. It was stated on the floor of the House by the chairman this morning that the bill was passed upon by the committee before the recent act, which was signed by the President, creating the most general and most liberal pension act ever passed in the history of the world by any country. Now, I can not conceive that any injury would be done to anyone by revising this bill, and it should be revised to conform to general provisions of the recent pension act.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman proposes, first, to bar anyone who has filed a claim for increase under the recent act, and, second, to bar anyone who is entitled to an increase under the recent act. As it could not be ascertained whether anyone is entitled to an increased pension under the recent act until they had filed an application, would not the gentleman's amendment bar everybody under this act?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Not those who are entitled to receive under the recent pension act. They would not be barred.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's amendment bars anyone in this act who has filed an application for an increase of pension under the recent act.

Mr. TRIBBLE. That means those who have filed. There are thousands of them who have already filed in the Pension Office and also are provided for in this bill. It is the purpose to reach the ones who are in this bill and who are filing and asking for $30 or less in the new legislation.

Mr. MANN. But under the other provisions of the bill it would be necessary to file an application in order to ascertain. The commissioner could not tell offhand whether a person is entitled to an increase under the recent law. That may depend upon facts.

Mr. TRIBBLE. It is true there may be some carried in this bill that the pension bill would cut out. I admit that.

Mr. MANN. But the Pension Bureau can not determine whether an existing pensioner or somebody carried in this act is entitled to a pension under the recent act without having an application before it or a pension before it. The Pension Commissioner can not tell offhand whether somebody is entitled to a pension or not, or increase of pension.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The amendment contemplates there shall be an investigation by the Pension Bureau.

Mr. MANN. Supposing it is a matter depending upon age and all those things. Without an application filed by the applicant the Pension Commissioner has no authority to make an investigation. Now, if the gentleman's amendment prevails, nobody can be paid a pension who might have an increase; therefore everybody who wanted a pension would have to make an application, and then the gentleman bars everybody who makes application.

Mr. TRIBBLE. It only refers to the names in this omnibus bill which is before the House now.

Mr. MANN. Anyone in this bill?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes.

Mr. MANN. So that in either horn of the dilemma which anyone took, he would be barred from getting the increase of pension.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I do not so understand it. The only purpose is to exclude anyone who is not provided for in the general law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I thought we had reached that point.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can not move to strike out the last word now. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill was engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] offers a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Moved, That the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions with instructions to report the same back to the House amended as follows:

Strike out all pensions allowed at the rate of more than $30 per month, reporting back each such item so stricken at $30 per month.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia to recommit the bill.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (S. 6646) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KINKEAD] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I do so for the purpose, Mr. Speaker, of congratulating the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] on his brief statement made this morning as to what, in his judgment, would be the attitude of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, now that the general pension bill which has been passed by this Congress is on the statute books, regarding widows of soldiers and others not affected by the act.

As a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions last year I realize the difficulties that confront the members of that committee in making recommendations to the House with regard to what shall be done in individual cases; and if Judge RUSSELL's views are carried out, if his judgment is the judgment of the committee, I feel safe in saying that all Members of the House, whether they believe, as I do, in a liberal pension policy toward the veterans of our wars, or otherwise, all of them will give their hearty approval to the rulings that come from that committee.

We can gather an idea of how rapidly the rolls of the Civil War veterans are being depleted from the fact that during the past week two generals who had gained fame on southern battle fields passed off almost within an hour of each other. One of them had made his name famous throughout the land in seconding in 1884 the nomination of the last Democratic President of the United States. "We love him for the enemies he has made," was the timely and effective sentiment uttered by him regarding Grover Cleveland. His words on that occasion will be remembered as long as Democracy lives, but by far his greatest service to the Nation was rendered from 1861 to 1865. Entering the Army as captain, after giving a brave, unselfish, patriotic service for four years, he was mustered out as brigadier general at the close of the great struggle. And now the entire country weeps with Wisconsin in the loss of her loyal, fearless son, Edward Stuyvesant Bragg.

Within the hour death called another famous general of that war, a man who had been in ill health for the past six or seven months, but whose illness was not expected to prove fatal. He had been in charge of the pension agency in New York for seven years. His work in that assignment had been eminently satisfactory, alike to the Government which he represented and to his comrades whose pension affairs were committed to his care. Gen. Kerwin had given a valiant service to the Union Army during the days that tried men's souls. Energetic, loyal, faithful to the end, a worthy son of that race which has been ever ready to respond to freedom's call, always devoted to his adopted land and to its flag. As we consider the untimely death of Bragg and Kerwin, we can readily see that the day is not far distant when everyone of that mighty army that fought with Grant, bled with Sherman, rallied under Sheridan, will have gone to his reward.

I remember well that some of us were criticized for voting for the increases of pensions granted in the bill of May 15. But I would rather suffer that criticism now—I would rather have it said of me that I voted for those increases of pensions now than to feel in after life when the men who wore the blue are no longer with us that when I had an opportunity to care for them in their old age, that when I had an opportunity to help care for their families and for their widows, I did what I consider my duty and voted to grant them a slight increase in their pensions.

Mr. Speaker, I am one of those who believe that it is better far to honor men in life than in death. I am one of those who believe that a rose given while the heart still throbs does more good than many garlands heaped upon the grave. A kind word, a single sympathetic sentiment uttered now while life still lingers in their time-worn, battle-scarred frames, means more to these men than tomes of praise—tributes of the great—after they have passed on. Let us do what we can for these brave men and the saddened widows of their comrades now. Let us as far as lies in our power make their declining years comfortable and happy. This, in my judgment, is a duty much more practical than the erecting of costly monuments when the hand of death claims them for her own. Let our Nation care well for her preservers while they are still with us. God will care well for them when He calls them from us. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate bill 6847, granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and he is hereby, directed to cause to be issued to Jesus Silva, jr., a patent to the following-described lands: Lots 3, 4, and 5 of section 25, township 21 south, range 1 west, New Mexico principal meridian, Las Cruces, N. Mex., land district, being the tract embraced in his homestead entry made October 5, 1905, upon which cash certificate issued February 3, 1909: Provided, That in said patent there shall be expressly reserved to the United States, or its successors, the right to take or use, without compensation to patentee or his grantees, any or all of the said lands needed for or in connection with the construction, maintenance, and operation of the Rio Grande reclamation project.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

EUGENE PRINCE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 220) to grant American citizenship to Eugene Prince.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas Eugene Prince, son of John Henry Prince, an American citizen residing in St. Petersburg, Russia, is not entitled to American citizenship by descent, under section 1993, Revised Statutes of the United States; and

Whereas the said Eugene Prince is not recognized as a citizen by the Government of Russia or by any other foreign Government; and

Whereas the said Eugene Prince is without the character and privileges of a citizen in any country of the world; and

Whereas the said Eugene Prince is now sojourning in the United States and intends to reside therein: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That Eugene Prince, son of John Henry Prince, an American citizen residing in St. Petersburg, Russia, be, and he is hereby, unconditionally admitted to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the House joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES A. COOLIDGE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the House resolution 580, referring the bill (H. R. 24844) for the relief of Charles A. Coolidge to the Court of Claims.

The resolution was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 24844) for the relief of Charles A. Coolidge, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts and conclusions of law under section 151 of the act of March 3, 1911, "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary" (Public Act No. 475, 61st Cong., 2d sess., p. 1138).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to make an inquiry. I judge that this is one of the cases that involves longevity pay. I ask whether that is a fact.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. I would say that the bill was looked after by my colleague [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH], and, being a member of the Committee on Claims, it was handed to me as reported. I understand there is a decision of the Supreme Court confirming the claim, and the only question is to refer it to the Court of Claims to find the amount due.

Mr. MANN. I will say to my friend from Michigan that there is a decision of the Supreme Court on the subject of longevity pay, and if that decision were followed all the cases that are barred by the statute of limitation would cost the Government a very large sum of money and involve a thousand or more cases. There is no need for any reference to the Court of Claims in any of those cases. The matter can be computed by the War Department, and would be computed by the War Department in any case, as the Court of Claims can not compute it. And I can see no reason for the reference in this bill to the Court of Claims if it is one of the longevity cases. Of course, all of these people have been trying in various ways to get Congress to pass either an omnibus bill or a special bill in order to set a precedent for the paying of all of these cases. Prior to this decision of the Supreme Court, no one supposed that the longevity pay began at the time the Supreme Court held that it did. All of those cases that were within the statute of limitations were paid through findings and claims filed in the Court of Claims. I can see no reason for Congress commencing now to go back and pay all of the claims that would date many years back, from the beginning of the time that longevity pay was allowed down to the time the statute of limitations interposed when the Supreme Court decision was filed.

They come in here by the basketful at different times. Of course, I can not tell from the resolution just what it is. There is nothing in the resolution or report to show, except an indication, and the indication is that it is a longevity claim. I shall be compelled to ask that it go over.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Can the gentleman tell how long ago that decision of the Supreme Court was rendered?

Mr. MANN. I can not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

MAG BROWN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was House resolution 581, referring the bill (H. R. 8507) for the relief of Mag Brown to the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House resolution 581.

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 8507) for the relief of Mag Brown, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts and conclusions of law under section 151 of the act of March 3, 1911, "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary" (Public Act No. 475, 61st Cong., 2d sess., p. 1138).

DEATH OF U. S. JACKSON, SERGEANT AT ARMS HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much to announce to the House the death, a few moments ago, of the Sergeant at Arms of the House, Mr. Jackson. I ask immediate consideration of the following resolution (H. Res. 588), which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. U. S. Jackson, Sergeant at Arms of the House.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to his memory the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, June 24, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

Mr. BACON resumed the chair as President pro tempore.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last, when, on request of Mr. NELSON and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

H. R. 1739. An act to amend section 4875 of the Revised Statutes to provide a compensation for superintendents of national cemeteries; and

H. R. 11933. An act authorizing the quitclaiming of the interest of the United States in certain land situated in Hampden County, Mass.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

H. R. 18841. An act incorporating the National Institute of Arts and Letters; and

H. R. 25002. An act to amend section 73 and section 76 of the act of August 27, 1894.

H. R. 1718. An act providing for the sale of the old Federal building and site at Owensboro, Ky., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

H. R. 18434. An act to repeal section 4716 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

H. R. 18504. An act to provide for the sale of fractional block No. 6, in the town of Forest Grove, Oreg., no longer needed for school purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

H. R. 21480. An act to establish a standard barrel and standard grades for apples when packed in barrels, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Standards, Weights, and Measures.

H. R. 21708. An act to authorize the lighting of Piney Branch Road from Georgia Avenue to Butternut Street was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

H. R. 21963. An act to make Fort Covington, N. Y., a subport of entry was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 24224. An act to amend sections 5, 11, and 25 of an act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyrights," approved March 4, 1909, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Patents.

H. R. 24703. An act to extend the authority to receive certified checks drawn on national and State banks and trust companies in payment for duties on imports and internal taxes and all public dues was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

H. R. 24699. An act extending the time for the repayment of certain war-revenue taxes erroneously collected was read twice by its title.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, in regard to that bill I wish to make a statement.

The Committee on Claims reported favorably some twenty-odd bills relating to claims for the refunding of inheritance taxes which were erroneously collected, as shown by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Knowlton case. When those bills went to the House, instead of acting on the individual bills the House committee reported this general provision, so that all cases similarly situated might be acted upon without having so many separate bills.

This is a substitute for all the Senate bills reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Claims and passed by the Senate. On that account I suggest that the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Claims, without objection.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore announced his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

H. R. 18849. An act for the relief of the Winnebago Indians of Nebraska and Wisconsin;

H. R. 20480. An act excepting certain lands in Lawrence and Pennington Counties, S. Dak., from the operations of the provisions of section 4 of an act approved June 11, 1906, entitled "An act to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves";

H. R. 20593. An act to authorize the Norfolk & Western Railway Co. to construct sundry bridges across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River;

H. R. 23460. An act authorizing the fiscal court of Pike County, Ky., to construct a bridge across the Russell Fork of the Big Sandy River at Marrowbone, Ky.;

H. R. 23461. An act authorizing the fiscal court of Pike County, Ky., to construct a bridge across Russell Fork of Big Sandy River at or near Millard, Ky.; and

H. J. Res. 299. Joint resolution proposing an international maritime conference.

HOUSE AMENDMENTS TO SENATE BILLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that there are certain messages from the House transmitting Senate bills with House amendments. The Chair feels that under the consent agreement it would be improper now to lay them before the Senate for action as they are matters about which contention might possibly arise. For that reason the Chair will withhold laying those messages before the Senate until after the consent agreement has been exhausted.

THE FLAG OF THE UNITED STATES (S. DOC NO. 856).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 15th instant, information relative to the placing of any flag, emblem, or banner above the Stars and Stripes over any fort, encampment, building, or ground under the jurisdiction of the War Department, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF THEODORE T. S. LAIDLEY, DECEASED (S. DOC. NO. 857).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings of fact and conclusion of law filed by the court in the cause of Jane A. Oberly, daughter, and Jane W. Laidley, widow, sole heirs of Theodore T. S. Laidley, deceased, v. United States, which case was referred to the Court of Claims by the resolution of the United States under the act of March 3, 1911, known as the judiciary act, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

De Lacey as judge of the juvenile court of the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CULLOM. I present a joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of Illinois, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THIRD SPECIAL SESSION, FORTY-SEVENTH GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF ILLINOIS, 1912.

Senate joint resolution 5.

Whereas the people of the lower Mississippi Valley have again this year been great sufferers from the overflow of the Mississippi River, entailing immense losses in life and property and in many instances the destruction of the crop prospects of the year; and

Whereas the Government of the United States and of the individual States along the lower Mississippi and numerous levee districts contiguous to its banks have, in the aggregate, expended millions upon millions of dollars within the past 40 years in the hope of preventing overflows and reclaiming the rich lands of that important region; and

Whereas this year, and frequently in the past, new high-water marks have been successively made and new areas inundated, thus continuing the losses and disappointing the hopes of the people; and

Whereas the lower Mississippi is the natural outlet to the sea for the waters of nearly half the area of the entire country, the vast plain lying between the Allegheny Mountains on the east and the Rocky Mountains on the west, all the northern portion of which, through tile and farm drains and the reclamation of swamps, is steadily pouring an increased volume of water into the great central stream; and

Whereas justice requires that the lower Mississippi Valley States should not be burdened with the task of providing outlet for all the water of the more northern portion; and

Whereas the time is at hand when the millions of people in this country will greatly need the vast increase of products of which the overflow and swamp lands of the lower valley is capable when once reclaimed and made secure against floods: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring herein), That it is the sense of the Legislature of the State of Illinois that the control of the waterways of the lower Mississippi Valley is a national problem and should be dealt with by the General Government on plans broad and comprehensive enough to prevent overflows, reclaim the waste areas, and make them available for the production of food for the millions of people they are capable of supporting.

Resolved, That the secretary of state is directed to send copies of this resolution to the Senators and Representatives from Illinois in the Congress of the United States, and they are hereby urged to use their best efforts to secure action by Congress in accord with the spirit, intent, and purpose herein expressed.

Adopted by the senate June 4, 1912.
Concurred in by the house June 5, 1912.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of Illinois, ss:

I, C. J. Doyle, secretary of State of the State of Illinois, do hereby certify that the foregoing joint resolution of the Forty-seventh General Assembly of the State of Illinois, passed and adopted at the third special session thereof, is a true and correct copy of the original joint resolution now on file in the office of the secretary of state.

In witness whereof I hereunto set my hand and affix the great seal of state, at the city of Springfield, this 6th day of June, A. D. 1912.

[SEAL.] C. J. DOYLE,
Secretary of State.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of the International Molders' Conference Board, of Chicago, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the better protection of American seamen, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Chicago, Dixon, Clifford, Quincy, Coal City, and Herrin, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the passage of the so-called injunction-limitation bill, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FLETCHER. I present a telegram in the nature of a petition from wholesale grocers in Florida and Georgia, requesting the passage of the Gould bill, known as the weight or measure branding bill. I ask that the telegram be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TAMPA, FLA., June 21, 1912.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned wholesale grocers doing business in Florida and Georgia, do most earnestly request and urge the passage of the Gould bill, known as weight or measure branding bill (H. R. 22526). We urge the passage of this bill for the reason that it is unquestionably the best bill that has been presented to your honorable body and, further, it is necessary for the honest manufacturers, wholesale, retailers, and consumers on account of its honesty of purpose.

Mr. FLETCHER. I present a communication from the secretary of the Bankers' Association of Florida, transmitting a resolution adopted at the nineteenth annual session of that association held in Key West, Fla., April 4 and 5. I ask that the communication and resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the communication and resolution were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FLORIDA BANKERS' ASSOCIATION,
Jacksonville, Fla., June 18, 1912.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I beg to quote you below a resolution passed by the Florida Bankers' Association at their nineteenth annual session held in Key West, Fla., April 4 and 5:

"Be it resolved by the Bankers' Association of the State of Florida, That it is the sense of this association that the purpose of the bill of the Monetary Commission is against the best interests of the progress and development and the management of the banks of Florida, and that our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to use their best efforts to prevent the passage of the bill."

Respectfully, yours,

G. R. DESAUSSURE, Secretary.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 7193) to provide for the construction of four revenue cutters; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WILLIAMS:

A bill (S. 7194) to establish a drainage fund and to provide for the reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands in certain States; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. McCUMBER:

A bill (S. 7195) to authorize the Great Northern Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CRAWFORD:

A bill (S. 7196) granting an honorable discharge to William Cawley (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CHARLES F. RIDDELL, CASHIER.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, by reason of the death of Hon. U. Stokes Jackson, Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, it is necessary to authorize some one to perform the functions of that office in relation to drawing money from the Treasury for the pay of Members of the House. I introduce a joint resolution in the proper and usual form, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will understand that the Senate consents to that action, unless there be objection. It is a matter of emergency and a matter of course also, and the Chair presumes that it will not be governed by the consent agreement. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 120) authorizing Charles F. Riddell, cashier in the office of Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, to draw checks, requisitions, and execute all papers necessary to obtain money appropriated for the salaries and mileage of Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners of the House of Representatives until the election of the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That Charles F. Riddell,, cashier in the office of Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to draw checks, requisitions, and execute all papers necessary to obtain from the United States Treasury the money appropriated for salaries and mileage of Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners of the House of Representatives until a Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives has been duly elected and qualified; and the Treasurer of the United States is hereby authorized to pay the said money to the said Riddell, cashier, in conformity with the provisions of this resolution; and that the bond executed by said Riddell, as cashier in the office of Sergeant at Arms in the House of Representatives, in the penal sum of $50,000, payable to the United States of America, by authority of public resolution No. 34, approved June the 4th, 1912, be, and the same is hereby, with the consent of the sureties on said bond, extended in force and effect to cover the faithful discharge of the aforesaid cashier's duties, as herein authorized and directed, until a Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives has been elected and qualified.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama (for Mr. BANKHEAD) submitted an amendment relative to the retirement of any officer of the United States Navy now on the retired list who prior to June 30, 1911, failed in his physical examination for promotion, etc., intended to be proposed to the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 24565), which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MYERS submitted an amendment proposing $3,000 for paving the public street of the city of Butte, Mont., in front of the Federal Government building in that city, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 25069), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CURTIS (by request) submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,200 to pay Joseph E. Johnson for services as stenographer in the office of the Sergeant at Arms, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—GERTRUDE BROWN.

On motion of Mr. McCUMBER, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill (S. 4672) granting a pension to Gertrude Brown, Sixty-second Congress, second session, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I give notice that on Friday, the 5th day of July, at the close of the morning business for that day, or as soon thereafter as I may be heard, by permission of the Senate I will submit some remarks on the right of Mr. WILLIAM LORIMER, a Senator from the State of Illinois, to a seat in this body.

HOUR OF MEETING ON THURSDAY.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday at 10 o'clock a. m.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 120) authorizing Charles F. Riddell, cashier in the office of Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, to draw checks, requisitions, and execute all papers necessary to obtain money appropriated for the salaries and mileage of Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners of the House of Representatives until the election of the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 120) authorizing Charles F. Riddell, cashier in the office of Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, to draw checks, requisitions, and execute all papers necessary to obtain money appropriated for the salaries and mileage of Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners of the House of Representatives until the election of the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 33 minutes a. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, June 27, 1912, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 24, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven we thank Thee for the gift of life, the joy of living, the hopes and promises of its prolongation beyond the confines of the earthly existence. And we most fervently pray that each day, each year, may be the preparation for the larger life of to-morrow. A purer, nobler life for the year that is coming. Comfort, we beseech Thee, the friends, the bereaved wife, and family of the officer of this House who has been summoned to another one of the Father's many mansions, and help them to look forward with faith and confidence to a reunion which shall never end, and "songs of praises we will ever give to Thee." In Jesus Christ ouf Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, June 22, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GILFRY, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following joint resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 120) authorizing Charles F. Riddell, cashier in the office of the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, to draw checks, requisitions, and execute all papers necessary to obtain money appropriated for the salaries and mileage of Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners of the House of Representatives until the election of the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives.

Resolved, etc., That Charles F. Riddell, cashier in the office of the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to draw checks, requisitions, and execute all papers necessary to obtain from the United States Treasury the money appropriated for salaries and mileage of Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners of the House of Representatives until a Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives has been duly elected and qualified; and the Treasurer of the United States is hereby authorized to pay the said money to the said Riddell, cashier, in conformity with the provisions of this resolution; and that the bond executed by said Riddell, as cashier in the office of the Sergeant at Arms in the House of Representatives, in the penal sum of $50,000, payable to the United States of America by authority of public resolution No. 34, approved June 4, 1912, be, and the same is hereby, with the consent of the sureties on said bond, extended in force and effect to cover the faithful discharge of the aforesaid cashier's duties as herein authorized and directed, until a Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives has been elected and qualified.

OFFICE OF THE SERGEANT AT ARMS.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the resolution in reference to the office of the Sergeant at Arms, which has just come over from the Senate, be taken from the Speaker's table and laid before the House for immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks to take the resolution referred to from the Speaker's table and consider it now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, this is District day, and I wish to take up District business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky as soon as the resolution is disposed of. The situation is that unless this resolution passes every Member of the House that has a check outstanding will have it protested. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 120) authorizing Charles F. Riddell, cashier in the Office of the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, to draw checks, requisitions, and execute all papers necessary to obtain money appropriated for the salaries and mileage of Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners of the House of Representatives until the election of the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives.

Resolved, etc., That Charles F. Riddell, cashier in the Office of the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to draw checks, requisitions, and execute all papers necessary to obtain from the United States Treasury the money appropriated for salaries and mileage of Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners of the House of Representatives until a Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives has been duly elected and qualified; and the Treasurer of the United States is hereby authorized to pay the said money to the said Riddell, cashier, in conformity with the provisions of this resolution; and that the bond executed by said Riddell as cashier in the Office of the Sergeant at Arms in the House of Representatives, in the penal sum of $50,000, payable to the United States of America, by authority of public resolution No. 34, approved June 4, 1912, be, and the same is hereby, with the consent of the sureties on said bond, extended in force and effect to cover the faithful discharge of the aforesaid cashier's duties as herein authorized and directed until a Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives has been elected and qualified.

Passed the Senate June 24, 1912.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I understand this resolution originates in the Senate at the request of the Members of the House, because the Senate met at 10 o'clock this morning, and would not be in session when the House met.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana. That is the reason that it was not passed by the House in the first place, because the Senate was to meet at 10 o'clock this morning and would adjourn before the House could meet and pass the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

There was no objection.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Kansas has a request to make.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have 15 minutes, in which time I desire to have a letter read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk a letter which I shall ask to have read. The letter was written by a man who has a rare ability to write of what he knows, and to write it in forceful phraseology. I ask that the letter be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SAGAMORE HILL,
Oyster Bay, N. Y., September 9, 1908.

Mr. CONRAD KOHRS,
Helena, Mont.

MY DEAR MR. KOHRS: I have received your letter about the candidacy of Mr. Taft, the man who I feel is in an especial sense the representative of all that in which I most believe in political life.

Every good citizen should desire to see both prosperity and justice, prosperity and fair and righteous dealing as between man and man, obtain permanently in this great Republic. As a people we are justly proud of our business industry, of our energy and intelligence in our work; and it is entirely right that we should ask ourselves as to any given course of conduct, "Will it be profitable?" But it is also no less emphatically true that the bulk of our people, the plain people, who found in Abraham Lincoln their especial champion and spokesman, regard the question, "Is this morally right?" as even more important than the question, "Is this profitable?" when applied to any given course of conduct. Indeed, in the long run our people are sure to find that in all dealings, alike in the business and the political world, what is really profitable is that which is morally right. The last few years have seen a great awakening of the public conscience and the growth of a stern determination to do away with corruption and unfair dealing, political, economic, social. It is urgently necessary that this great reform movement should go on. But no reform movement is healthy if it goes on by spasms; if it is marked by periods of frenzied advance, followed, as such periods of frenzied advance must always be followed, by equally violent periods of reaction.

The revolutionary and the reactionary really play into one another's hands, to the extent that each by his excesses necessarily tends to arouse such disgust, such a feeling of revolt, in the minds of quiet people, as temporarily to restore the other to power. To permit the direction of our public affairs to fall alternately into the hands of revolutionaries and reactionaries, of the extreme radicals of unrest and of the bigoted conservatives who recognize no wrongs to remedy, would merely mean that the Nation had embarked on a feverish course of violent oscillation which would be fraught with great temporary trouble, and would produce no adequate good in the end. The true friend of reform, the true foe of abuses, is the man who steadily perseveres in righting wrongs, in warring against abuses, but whose character and training are such that he never promises what he can not perform, that he always a little more than makes good what he does promise, and that, while steadily advancing, he never permits himself to be led into foolish excesses which would damage the very cause he champions. In Mr. Taft we have a man who combines all of these qualities to a degree which no other man in our public life since the Civil War has surpassed. To a flaming hatred of injustice, to a scorn of all that is base and mean, to a hearty sympathy with the oppressed, he unites entire disinterestedness, courage both moral and physical of the very highest type, and a kindly generosity of nature which makes him feel that all of his fellow countrymen are in very truth his friends and brothers, that their interests are his, and that all his great qualities are to be spent with lavish freedom in their service. The honest man of means, the honest and law-abiding business man, can feel safe in his hands because of the very fact that the dishonest man of great wealth, the man who swindles or robs his fellows, would not so much as dare to defend his evil doing in Mr. Taft's presence. The honest wageworker, the honest laboring man, the honest farmer, the honest mechanic or small trader, or man of small means, can feel that in a peculiar sense Mr. Taft will be his representative because of the very fact that he has the same scorn for the demagogue that he has for the corruptionist, and that he would front threats of personal violence from a mob with the unquailing and lofty indifference with which he would front the bitter anger of the wealthiest and most powerful corporations. Broad though his sympathies are, there is in him not the slightest tinge of weakness. No consideration of personal interest, any more than of fear for his personal safety, could make him swerve a hair's breadth from the course which he regards as right in the interest of the whole people.

I have naturally a peculiar interest in the success of Mr. Taft, and in seeing him backed by a majority in both Houses of Congress which would heartily support his policies. For the last 10 years, while I have been governor of New York and President, I have been thrown into the closest intimacy with him, and he and I have on every essential point stood in heartiest agreement, shoulder to shoulder. We have the same views as to what is demanded by the national interest and honor, both within our own borders and as regards the relations of this Nation with other nations. There is no fight for decency and fair dealing which I have waged in which I have not had his heartiest and most effective sympathy and support, and the policies for which I stand are his policies as much as mine.

It is not possible in the space of this letter to discuss all the many and infinitely varied questions of moment with which Mr. Taft as President would have to deal; let him be judged by what he has himself done and by what the administration, in which he has played so conspicuous a part, has done. But to illustrate just what his attitude is, let me touch on two matters now prominent in the public mind:

Mr. Taft can be trusted to exact justice from the railroads for the very reason that he can be trusted to do justice to the railroads. The railroads are the chief instruments of interstate commerce in the country, and they can neither be held to a proper accountability on the one hand nor given proper protection on the other save by the affirmative action of the Federal Government. The law as laid down by the Federal courts clearly shows that the States have not and can not devise laws adequate to meet the problems caused by the great growth of the railroads doing an interstate-commerce business, for more than four-fifths of the business of the railroads is interstate, and under the Constitution of the United States only the Federal Government can exercise control thereover. It is absolutely necessary that this control should be affirmative and thoroughgoing. All interstate business carried on by the great corporations should, in the interest of the whole people, be far more closely supervised than at present by the National Government; but this is especially true of the railroads, which can not exist at all save by the exercise of powers granted them on behalf of the people, and which, therefore, should be held to a peculiar accountability to the people. It is in the interest of the people that they should not be permitted to do injustice; and it is no less to the interest of the people that they should not suffer injustice. Their prime purpose is to carry the commodities of the farmers and the business men; they could not be built save for the money contributed to them by their shareholders; they could not be run at all save for the money paid out in wages to the railroad employees; and, finally, they could not be run judiciously, or profitably to any one, were it not for the employment by them of some masterful guiding intelligence, whether of one man or of a group of men. There are therefore several sets of interests to be considered. Each must receive proper consideration, and when any one of them selfishly demands exclusive consideration the demand must be refused. Along certain lines all of these groups have the same interests.

It is to the interest of shipper, farmer, wageworker, business man, honest shareholder, and honest manager alike that there should be economy, honesty, intelligence, and fair treatment of all. To put an effective stop to stock watering would be a benefit to everybody except the swindlers who profit by stock watering; it would benefit the honest shareholder because honest investments would not be brought into competition with mere paper; it would benefit the wageworker, because when the money earned does not have to go to paying interest on watered capital more of it is left, out of which to pay wages; it would benefit the shipper, because when only honest stockholders have to be paid interest, rates need not be improperly raised; it would benefit the public, because there would be ample money with which to give efficient service. Similarly the prevention of favoritism, as among shippers, does no damage to anyone who is honest, and confers great good upon the smaller business man and the farmer, whom it relieves of oppression. Again, such supervision of accounts and management as will prevent crookedness and oppression works good, directly or indirectly, to all honest people. Therefore everything that can be done along all these lines should be done; and no man's legitimate interest would thereby be hurt. But after this point has been reached great care must be exercised not to work injustice to one class in the effort to show favor to another class, and each class naturally tends to remember only its own needs. The stockholders must receive an ample return on their investments or the railroads cannot be built and successfully maintained; and the rates to shippers and the wages to employees, from the highest to the lowest, must all be conditioned upon this fact. On the other hand, in a public-service corporation we have no right to allow such excessive profits as will necessitate rates being unduly high and wages unduly low. Again, while in his proper ways rates must be kept low, we must always remember that we have no right and no justification to reduce them when the result is the reduction of the wages of the great army of railroad men. A fair working arrangement must be devised according to the needs of the several cases, so that profits, wages, and rates shall each be reasonable with reference to the other two—and in wages I include the properly large amounts which should always be paid to those whose masterful ability is required for the successful direction of great enterprises. Combinations which favor such an equitable arrangement should themselves be favored and not forbidden by law, although they should be strictly supervised by the Government through the Interstate Commerce Commission, which should have the power of passing summarily upon not only the question of the reduction but the raising of rates.

This railroad problem is itself one of the phases of one of the greatest and most intricate problems of our civilization; for its proper solution we need not merely honesty and courage, but judgment, good sense, and entire fair-mindedness. Demagogy in such a matter is as certain to work evil as corruption itself. The man who promises to raise the wages of the railroad employees to the highest point and at the same time to reduce rates to the lowest point is promising what neither he nor anyone else can perform; and if the effort to perform it were attempted disaster would result to both shipper and wageworker and ruin to the business interests of the country. The man to trust in such a matter as this is the man who, like Judge Taft, does not promise too much, but who could not be swayed from the path of duty by any argument, by any consideration; who will wage relentless war on the successful wrongdoer among railroad men as among all other men; who will do all that can be done to secure legitimately low rates to shippers and absolute evenness among the rates thus secured; but who will neither promise nor attempt to secure rates so low that the wage earner would lose his earnings and the shareholder, whose money built the road, his profits. He will not favor a ruinous experiment like Government ownership of railways; he will stand against any kind of confiscation of honestly acquired property; but he will work effectively for the most efficient type of Government supervision and control of railways, so as to secure just and fair treatment of the people as a whole.

What is here said as to his attitude on the railway question applies to the whole question of the trusts. He will promise nothing on this subject unless he firmly believes he can make his promise good. He will go into no chimerical movement to destroy all great business combinations, for this can only be done by destroying all modern business; but he will in practical fashion do everything possible to secure such efficient control, on behalf of the people as a whole, over these great combinations as will deprive them of the power to work evil. Mr. Taft's decision in the Addystone Pipe Line case while on the bench is proof, by deeds not by words, of the far-sighted wisdom with which he serves the interests of the whole people even when those of the most powerful corporations are hostile thereto.

If there is one body of men more than another whose support I feel I have a right to challenge on behalf of Secretary Taft, it is the body of wageworkers of the country. A stancher friend, a fairer and truer representative, they can not find within the borders of the United States. He will do everything in his power for them except to do that which is wrong; he will do wrong for no man, and therefore can be trusted by all men. During the 10 years of my intimate acquaintance with him, since I have myself, as governor and President, been obliged to deal practically with labor problems, he has been one of the men upon whose judgment and aid I could always rely in doing everything possible for the cause of the wageworker, of the man who works with his hands, or with both hands and head.

Mr. Taft has been attacked because of the injunctions he delivered while on the bench. I am content to rest his case on these very injunctions; I maintain that they show why all our people should be grateful to him and should feel it safe to intrust their dearest interests to him. Most assuredly he never has yielded and never will yield to threat or pressure of any sort, as little if it comes from labor as if it comes from capital; he will no more tolerate the violence of a mob than the corruption and oppression and arrogance of a corporation or of a wealthy man. He will not consent to limit the power of the courts to put a stop to wrongdoing wherever found. This very fact should make the labor people feel a peculiar confidence in him. He has incurred the bitter hostility of foolish and bigoted reactionaries by his frank criticism of the abuse of the power of injunction in labor disputes, and he is pledged to do all he can to put a stop to the abuses in the exercise of the power of injunction. He will never promise anything that he will not do all in his power to perform. He can always be trusted to do a little better than his word, and the fact that before election he will not promise the impossible is in itself a guaranty that after election all that is possible will be done.

His record as a judge makes the whole country his debtor. His actions and decisions are part of the great traditions of the bench. They guaranteed and set forth in striking fashion the rights of the general public as against the selfish interests of any class, whether of capitalists or of laborers. They set forth and stand by the rights of the wageworkers to organize and to strike, as unequivocally as they set forth and stand by the doctrine that no conduct will be tolerated that would spell destruction to the Nation as a whole. As for the attack upon his injunctions in labor disputes, made while he was on the bench, I ask that the injunctions be carefully examined. I ask that every responsible and fair-minded labor leader, every responsible and fair-minded member of a labor organization, read these injunctions for himself. If he will do so, instead of condemning them he will heartily approve of them and will recognize this further astonishing fact that the principles laid down by Judge Taft in these very injunctions, which laboring people are asked to condemn, are themselves the very principles which are now embodied in the laws or practices of every responsible labor organization. No responsible organization would now hesitate to condemn the abuses against which Judge Taft's injunctions were aimed. The principles which he therein so wisely and fearlessly laid down serve as a charter of liberty for all of us, for wageworkers, for employers, for the general public; for they rest on the principles of fair dealing for all, of even-handed justice for all. They mark the judge who rendered them as standing for the rights of the whole people; as far as daylight is from darkness, so far is such a judge from the timeserver, the truckler to the mob, or the cringing tool of great, corrupt, and corrupting corporations. Judge Taft on the bench—as since, in the Philippines, in Panama, in Cuba, in the War Department—showed himself to be a wise, a fearless, and an upright servant of the whole people, whose services to the whole people were beyond all price. Moreover, let all good citizens remember that he rendered these services, not when it was easy to do so, but when lawless violence was threatened, when malice, domestic and civic disturbance threatened the whole fabric of our Government and of civilization; his actions showed not only the highest kind of moral courage but of physical courage as well, for his life was freely and violently threatened.

Let all fair-minded men, wageworkers and capitalists alike, consider yet another fact. In one of his decisions upon the bench Judge Taft upheld in the strongest fashion and for the first time gave full validity to the principle of the employers' liability for injuries done workmen. This was before any national law on the subject was enacted. Judge Taft's sense of right, his indignation against oppression in any form, against any attitude that is not fair and just, drove him to take a position which was violently condemned by short-sighted capitalists and employers of labor, which was so far in advance of the time that it was not generally upheld by the State courts, but which we are now embodying in the law of the land. Judge Taft was a leader, a pioneer, while on the bench, in the effort to get justice for the wageworker, in jealous championship of his rights; and all upright and farsighted laboring men should hold it to his credit that at the same time he fearlessly stood against the abuses of labor, just as he fearlessly stood against the abuses of capital. If elected, he has shown by his deeds that he will be President of no class, but of the people as a whole; he can be trusted to stand stoutly against the two real enemies of our democracy—against the man who to please one class would undermine the whole foundation of orderly liberty and against the man who, in the interest of another class, would secure business prosperity by sacrificing every right of the working people.

I have striven as President to champion in every proper way the interests of the wageworker, for I regard the wageworker, excepting only the farmer, the tiller of the soil, as the man whose well-being is most essential to the healthy growth of this great Nation. I would for no consideration advise the wageworker to do what I thought was against his interest. I ask his support for Mr. Taft exactly as I ask such support from every farsighted and right-thinking American citizen, because I believe with all my heart that nowhere within the borders of our great country can there be found another man who will as vigilantly and efficiently as Mr. Taft support the rights of the workingman as he will the rights of every man who in good faith strives to do his duty as an American citizen. He will protect the just rights of both rich and poor, and he will war relentlessly against lawlessness and injustice, whether exercised on behalf of property or of labor.

On the bench Judge Taft showed the two qualities which make a great judge—wisdom and moral courage. They are also the two qualities which make a great President.

Sincerely, yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

[Applause.]

During the reading of the letter, the time of Mr. CAMPBELL having expired, by unanimous consent, on the request of Mr. MANN, his time was extended five minutes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for 10 minutes in which to address the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HULL). The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, here is a document recently issued by the ex-President of the United States, Col. Theodore Roosevelt, which is very interesting reading, and I desire to have it read to the House in my time. What Mr. Taft has said about Mr. Roosevelt recently would also make interesting reading just now.

The Clerk read as follows:

ROOSEVELT READY TO TAKE LEAD OF A NEW MOVEMENT—SAYS IF PEOPLE DEMAND IT HE WOULD ACCEPT NOMINATION OF PROGRESSIVE PARTY—DELEGATES NOT TO BOLT.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 21, 1912.

Col. Theodore Roosevelt yesterday issued this statement:

"The time has come when I feel that I must make certain statements not merely to honestly elected members of the Republican national convention, but to the rank and file of the Republican Party and to the honest people of the entire Nation. I went into this fight for certain great principles. At the moment I can only serve these principles by continuing to bear the personal responsibility which their advocacy has brought to me.

"On behalf of these principles I made my appeal straight to the people themselves. I went before them, I made my argument in full, and every move I made was in the open, without concealment of any kind.

"The opposition to me was extraordinarily bitter, for I was opposed by the practically solid phalanx of the big, conscienceless political bosses, with back of them the practically solid phalanx of the big, conscienceless beneficiaries of special privilege in every form, and of course the many big newspapers which are controlled by or in the interest of the bosses and special privilege.

"Nevertheless, in the appeal to the people I won. In many of the Republican States and of the Democratic States where there is a large and real Republican Party primaries of different kinds were held and a substantial expression of the will of the people was obtained.

"In these primary States some 3,000,000 voters, the rank and file of the Republican Party, cast their votes. I beat Mr. Taft considerably over two to one. In these States I obtained about six delegates to Mr. Taft's one. Nearly three-fourths of my delegates came from these primary States where the people had a chance to express themselves.

TAFT'S SUPPORT USELESS AT POLLS.

"Mr. Taft's strength, as indicated by the two roll calls already taken, consisted chiefly (aside from his 90 stolen delegates) of the nearly solid delegations from the Territories and from the Southern States, in which there is no real Republican Party—South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana—and of Northern States like New York, where the people had no chance to express themselves at primaries and where the delegates were picked by the bosses.

"In spite of these odds against me, I obtained a clear majority of all the delegates elected to the convention. In my campaign I again and again stated that if the people decided against me, I would have nothing to say, but that if they decided for me and the politicians then robbed me of the victory I would not silently and tamely acquiesce.

OPPONENTS USE FOUL MEANS.

"It was already evident that my opponents, with Mr. Taft's encouragement, intended to beat me by foul means if they could not do so by fair means.

"The crucial but not the only step in the concerted and hitherto successful effort to cheat the people out of the victory they had fairly won was taken up by the now defunct national committee, which, without one show of justification and with cynical contempt of the most ordinary rules of decency, in making up the temporary roll call unseated 90 fairly elected Roosevelt delegates and substituted for them 90 Taft delegates who in the convention represent nothing whatever but successful fraud.

"I was clearly entitled to all these 90 delegates; all the 90 possessed, for instance, clearer titles than the uncontested Taft delegates from New York City; and as to 70 of them, their titles were as flawless as those of any other delegates in the convention.

FRAUDULENT VOTES ELECT ROOT.

"Mr. ROOT was elected, and Gov. Deneen's motion for partially cleansing the roll of fraud was defeated by the vote of these 90 fraudulent delegates—the last being a vote on a straight moral issue, the result of which, in my judgment, ought to render it impossible for any man longer to take part in the proceedings of the convention as now constituted. The majority in each case was slightly over 50.

"In each case, therefore, if it had not been for the hitherto successful rascality which placed these fraudulent delegates on the roll and permitted them to vote the cause of decency would have won; Mr. McGovern would have been elected in place of Mr. ROOT, Gov. Deneen's motion would have prevailed, and the Republican national convention would now have been exercising in good faith the high, honorable, and vitally important function of honestly representing the wishes, the judgment, and the interests of the plain people who make up the mass of the Republican Party.

CONVENTION REPRESENTS FRAUD.

"Instead, it now presents nothing but successful political fraud perpetrated in the interest of political and financial privilege.

"I understand that Mr. ROOT has announced that no one of the stolen delegates will be allowed to vote on his own case, but that all will be allowed to vote on one another's cases. Such a ruling is a sheer denial of justice and fair play.

"All these 90 fraudulent delegates were seated at the same time by the votes of the same national committeemen to serve the same purpose. The credentials committee appointed to try their cases included three of their own number—from the States of Washington, Arizona, and Texas—where the delegations were stolen en masse. This committee selected as its chairman the Guggenheim delegate from Colorado, who had already, as national committeeman, assisted in initiating the frauds upon which he is now to sit in judgment.

"Nothing that this committee may do is entitled to consideration, and in considering what they do it will be well to keep in mind the remark made in private by one of the national committeemen, who, when asked why they had stolen so many more delegates than were needed for their purpose, answered that it would enable the credentials committee to make a show of generosity by unseating some, while retaining a number amply sufficient to accomplish all the ends they have in view.

MEANS A TAINTED NOMINATION.

"Moreover, it is well to remember that the fraud is equally great and equally reprehensible, whether the fraudulent delegates actually vote on the nomination for President or whether they are merely used to create a situation which renders it unnecessary for them to vote on the nomination for President. If the roll is not purged en masse of these fraudulently elected delegates the whole election of the convention is tainted.

"The committee on rules, against the protest of the progressive members, has just provided for the perpetuation of the national committee in the form responsible for the scandalous outrages which have at this moment brought the Republican Party to the breaking point; and they have explicitly refused to recognize the principle of popular presidential primaries and have made the national committee supreme over the people in the matter of primaries.

RESPECTABLE MEN AID UNSCRUPULOUS.

"Unfortunately in our political life the unscrupulous man who commits wrongs such as these can usually count on having some respectable men support him and other respectable men oppose him, but cease their opposition at the point when it would become really effective.

"In this connection the unscrupulous men who are the leaders have already received support from the former class of respectable men; and they count upon seeing representatives of the latter class, who have hitherto voted against them, fear to take the decisive step of sundering connection with the fraudulent convention itself.

"Such are the facts about the national convention as now constituted. I decline any longer to be bound by any action it may take. I decline to regard as binding any nomination it may make. I do not regard successful fraud and deliberate political theft as constituting a title to party regularity, or a claim to the support of any honest man of any party.

"I hope that the honestly elected majority will at once insist upon the immediate purging of the roll in its entirety and not piecemeal by the convention.

"If this purging is not accomplished, I hope the honestly elected delegates will decline all further connection with a convention whose action is now determined, and has hitherto been determined, by a majority which is made a majority only by the action of the fraudulent delegates whom the convention has refused to strike from the rolls.

"If the leaders of the honestly elected majority disagree with me in this matter and desire me to lead the fight, I will do so.

"There can be no cause for which it is better worth while to fight, none in which it is of less consequence what happens to the individual himself, provided only that he valiantly does his duty in the forward movement. I shall make my appeal to all honest men, East and West, North and South, and gladly abide the result, whatever that result may be.

"THEODORE ROOSEVELT."

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

On June 18, 1912:

H. R. 16612. An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to convey a certain lot in the city of Alva, Okla.;

H. R. 13041. An act to provide for the support and maintenance of bastards in the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 23799. An act to amend "An act to authorize the Dauphin Island Railway & Harbor Co., its successors or assigns, to construct and maintain a bridge or bridges, or viaducts, across the water between the mainland, at or near Cedar Point, and Dauphin Island, both Little and Big; also to dredge a channel from the deep waters of Mobile Bay into Dauphin Bay; also to construct and maintain docks and wharves along both Little and Big Dauphin Islands."

On June 19, 1912:

H. R. 9061. An act limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States, or for any Territory, or for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

H. R. 20585. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 21230. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 21597. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 22261. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 23063. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and to certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. R. 23557. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

MILITARY ENCAMPMENT AND MANEUVERS (H. DOC. NO. 852).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Very complete arrangements have been tentatively prepared for the participation in camps and maneuvers of a large portion of the Organized Militia of the United States. Preparation has been made for this most important military instruction both by the United States and by the various States whose Organized Militia will participate. The magnitude of the maneuver plans can be seen when it is estimated that 70,000 officers and enlisted men of the Organized Militia will take part in them during the coming year. Should it be impossible to carry out the contemplated maneuvers it will be at a very great loss of efficiency to the troops concerned and will entail a great disappointment to the thousands of men who, with the maneuvers in view, have been preparing themselves therefor.

In contemplation of the maneuvers it has been necessary already to expend the sum of $80,000 from the unexpended balance of last year's appropriation for maneuver purposes for the Organized Militia, which sum will be lost should the project of maneuvers not be consummated. In addition to this, the various States have made arrangements to expend large amounts from their apportionment from the funds appropriated by Congress under section 1661, Revised Statutes, or from funds appropriated by the State. Without an appropriation by Congress the maneuvers may not be held. I have the honor, therefore, strongly to recommend and urge that the following item, taken from House bill No. 18956 (Army appropriation bill), be enacted separately and specially:

One million three hundred and fifty thousand dollars "Encampment and maneuvers, Organized Militia, 1912–1914."

In addition to the appropriation for the Organized Militia for maneuver purposes it would be necessary that certain amounts be appropriated and made immediately available for the Regular Army to participate with the Organized Militia and aid the latter in the purpose of the maneuvers. This appropriation would total $367,500, and is made up of the following items:

Regular supplies	$160,000
Incidental expenses	4,500
Barracks and quarters	33,000
Army transportation	75,000
Roads and walks, etc	4,000
Water and sewers	57,000
Clothing and equipage	34,000
Total	367,500

The immense importance of the training of the militia leads me again to urge most strongly that the two appropriations mentioned be made available on or before the 2d day of July, 1912, since, unless the maneuvers can be definitely determined upon by that date, the plans for the encampments and maneuvers of a great portion of the Organized Militia of the United States will have to be abandoned.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 24, 1912.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, the situation referred to in the President's message was created by his veto of the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 18956), which carried in it $1,350,000 for these maneuvers. The recommendation of the President will be acted upon as speedily as we can do so under existing circumstances, but it is well known to all that both the House and Senate have practically adjourned until the 1st of July. I move to refer the present message to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, the plan is to have the maneuvers very early in July.

Mr. HAY. July 5, I believe.

Mr. MANN. Of course, so far as the actual appropriation is concerned, I suppose that if it be made by the 2d of July it would be in sufficient time.

Mr. HAY. I so understand from what the President says in his message.

Mr. MANN. Is it practical for the Army and the national reserve to proceed with their plans meanwhile with any sort of assurance that the appropriation will be made? As I understand, the gentleman from Virginia himself, and probably his committee, is perfectly willing that this emergency appropriation should be made as speedily as possible.

Mr. HAY. As speedily as possible; yes.

Mr. MANN. I think the same is true absolutely of this side of the House.

Mr. HAY. I will say that as far as I am personally concerned that is true. The gentleman will understand that a bill of that character would have to go to the calendar and could only be taken up and passed by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. The day upon which we meet next week, Monday, is suspension day, and I take it there will be no trouble in passing it at that time.

Mr. HAY. It could be passed at that time.

Mr. MANN. And probably there will be no objection to it, but I think it would be well if the Army officials and the National Guard officials have the understanding that it is the expectation, at least, of gentlemen in Congress to make the emergency appropriation.

Mr. HAY. I have already stated that as speedily as it possibly can be done the appropriation will be provided for. I do not think I can go any further than that.

Mr. MANN. I agree with the gentleman. I wanted to have it clearly understood in the House that no one would like to make objection to it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I should say that by the 2d of July provision for almost the whole public service would have to be made, or the public service stops—oh, for 15 or 30 days, whatever in the wisdom of the majority of the House and the Senate would seem apt to them as a matter of policy. That would be true not only as to the militia, but also as to the whole public service.

Mr. HAY. I will state to the gentleman that this appropriation does not stand on all fours with the appropriations which may be continued. The appropriation for this purpose in the Army appropriation bill last year carried only $350,000, and a continuation of it for 30 days would not meet the present requirements. The appropriation in the present Army bill is $1,350,000, so that in order that these maneuvers shall go on it is necessary to appropriate the whole amount.

Mr. CANNON. It might be done, however, in a resolution that appropriated otherwise for the extension of the public service.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, it will probably be necessary, in the event that any joint resolution is passed, coming from the gentleman's and my own committee, the Committee on Appropriations, to make special provision as to certain matters. That was so particularly true as to this matter of the Army maneuvers that the majority members of the Committee on Appropriations felt it was perfectly proper that the matter, belonging primarily to the Committee on Military Affairs, should go to that committee and should be taken care of independently, and they have no objection to the motion as made by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. CANNON. I think it ought to go to that committee, but it might well be included in a resolution of the kind to which I refer.

Mr. SHERLEY. The question of what will be done about providing other funds, because of the failure of the supply bills, will be met when that situation arises. I agree with the gentleman from Virginia that this is the course to pursue at this time.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion to refer the communication to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. PLUMLEY for 12 days on account of important business.

BILLS ON THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I understand that it will require the House to wait a short time in order that the joint resolution may be engrossed and signed authorizing the Deputy Sergeant at Arms to sign the Members' checks, and whilst we are waiting for that purpose I ask unanimous consent that the order which was in force last Saturday in reference to the Private Calendar may be renewed to-day so that the remaining bills on the Private Calendar may be called up by unanimous consent and be acted on in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the order applying last week shall be continued to-day as to bills on the Private Calendar; that they shall be called, and those not objected to shall be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MANN. That means, to proceed where we left off the other day.

The SPEAKER. Yes; proceed where we left off. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

THEODORE DEHON.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9136) for the relief of the heirs of Theodore Dehon.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, that bill and several after it were disposed of the other day. I ask that the bill go over.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

GEORGE E. PAYNE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 22311) for the relief of the legal representatives of George E. Payne, deceased.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask to have this bill go over. This bill and Calendar No. 153 were read before the House last Saturday and objected to and the Clerk read the calendar down to No. 154, House resolution 581, when the motion to adjourn was made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

MAG BROWN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was House resolution 581, in lieu of House bill 8507, for the relief of Mag Brown, and referring the same to the Court of Claims?

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 8507) for the relief of Mag Brown, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts and conclusions of law under section 151 of the act of March 3, 1911, "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary" (Public act No. 475, 61st Cong., 2d sess., p. 1138).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

MRS. THOMAS S. FERRAL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was House resolution 582, a resolution in lieu of House bill 15752, for the relief of Mrs. Thomas S. Ferral, and referring the same to the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 15752) for the relief of Mrs. Thomas S. Ferral, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts and conclusions of law under section 151 of the act of March 3, 1911, "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary" (Public act No. 475, 61st Cong., 2d sess., p. 1138).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there anyone here from the Committee on Claims who knows; if so, I would like to inquire, why these individual resolutions were not included in the omnibus resolution. Very well—I do not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The question was taken and the resolution was agreed to.

JAMES EASSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 265) for the relief of James Easson.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Let the bill go over.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

GEORGE IVERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 100) to carry into effect the findings of the military board of officers in the case of George Ivers, administrator.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Let the bill go over.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

JOE COOK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 25060) for the relief of Joe Cook.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $422.25 to Joe Cook, of Manhattan, Nev., found and held to be due him by the Secretary of Agriculture under contract of February 8, 1911, for the construction of a rangers' headquarters on the Toiyabe National Forest Reserve, Kinston Canyon, Nev.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT E. BURKE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4113) for the relief of Robert E. Burke.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Robert E. Burke, of Brooklyn, N. Y., the sum of $4,340.70, as reimbursement for expenses actually incurred by him in connection with his duties as United States customs inspector at the port of New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, this bill as introduced carries the sum of $4,340. The committee recommends to increase it to $5,590. I have no objection to the consideration of the original bill if the sum is not to be increased. There is no justice in the increase.

Mr. FARR. That was due to a recommendation of the department.

Mr. MANN. The department did recommend that this man be given compensation in the way of an award. But the proposition in the bill is to pay him his salary and expenses while he was out of the service. If he is to be paid his salary as an official of the Government, then he is not entitled to any reward such as would be paid to a person outside of the service for obtaining information about customs frauds.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I will say that the committee added that because the department recommended the additional $1,250 as a moiety for the work he had done.

Mr. MANN. But I think they did not recommend that he be paid his salary during this time.

Mr. FARR. They certainly did, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. No; that is where the committee made a mistake. The committee recommended that the man be paid his $1,250 moiety and his expenses and attorney's fees. That is what the department recommended. The bill provided for the payment of the expenses, attorney's fees, and salary, and thereupon the committee added the reward in addition. Now, if a man has been in the service and discharged for reasons which we think were not good and then we pay him his salary, he is not entitled to an extra reward for performing the functions of his office.

I will read the letter, if the gentleman wants it, from the department on the subject. It is from Acting Secretary Curtis, and is dated June 11, 1912:

As it appears that Inspector Burke's efforts resulted directly in the collection of a fine of $5,000 and the conviction of two other persons of frauds upon the revenue, the department also recommends that an additional amount in the nature of compensation in lieu of moieties, amounting to $1,250, be granted, and such an amount for his expenses and attorney's fees in making the investigations during the time he was out of the service as your committee may deem reasonable and just. The amount claimed by Inspector Burke for such expenses is $962.80, and for attorney's fees, $1,500. The department, however, has no means of ascertaining the correctness of these figures, nor whether they are reasonable or not.

I am not willing, so far as I am concerned, by unanimous consent, to pay a man his salary and at the same time pay him extra money for the work that he performs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

Mr. MANN. No; I do not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lines 6 and 7, strike out the words "four thousand three hundred and forty" and insert the words "five thousand five hundred and ninety."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ERSKINE R. K. HAYES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3459) for the relief of Erskine R. K. Hayes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have that bill go over.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

TURNER HARDWARE CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 458) for the relief of the Turner Hardware Co.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any available funds in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Creek Nation of Indians, to the Turner Hardware Co., of Muskogee, Okla., the sum of $86.81, in full payment of an account for supplies purchased by the superintendent of the Colored Orphans' Home in the year 1902.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM F. M'KIM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1754) to correct the military record of William F. McKim.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the fact that William F. McKim, who was a private of Company I, Second Regiment Kentucky Infantry, was absent without leave from the 10th day of April, 1863, to the 27th day of May, 1863, shall be no bar to any right, privilege, or benefit as an honorably discharged soldier to which he would have been entitled had he not been so absent without leave during the period specified.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read as follows: "An act for the relief of William F. McKim."

ALFRED L. DUTTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 897) for the relief of Alfred L. Dutton.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, Alfred L. Dutton shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Battery E, Third United States Artillery, on the 18th day of June, 1865: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

FRED R. PAYNE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15241) for the relief of Fred R. Payne.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, there seems to be no report from the Navy Department on this case. I do not think we ought to promote men on the retired list without at least knowing the situation and the views of the Navy concerning the cases. I therefore object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects.

JOHN P. RISLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19190) for the relief of John P. Risley.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws John P. Risley, late of Battery D, First Regiment United States Artillery, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged from the military service of the United States on September 11, 1865.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6, after the word "been," insert the word "honorably," so that it will read, "considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service," etc.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

SIMON NAGER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18425) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Simon Nager.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Simon Nager, formerly of Company D, First Regiment United States Infantry, from which he was honorably discharged, subsequently reenlisting in Company A, First Regiment United States Infantry, from which he deserted, and to issue to said Simon Nager an honorable discharge.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the following:

"That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the Soldiers' Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, Simon Nager shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a musician of Company D, First Regiment United States Infantry, on the 30th day of March, 1864, and of Company A, First Regiment United States Infantry, on the 1st day of May, 1864, and of Company K, Seventh Regiment United States Infantry, on the 15th day of March, 1868: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the House bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS AND ASSIGNS OF MARCUS P. NORTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 25201) for the adjudication and determination of the claims arising under joint resolution of July 14, 1870, authorizing the Postmaster General to continue in use in the postal service Marcus P. Norton's combined postmarking and stamp-canceling hand-stamp patents.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Let the bill go over, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to withdraw his objection, if he will, and let the bill that he just objected to be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. They are all passed over without prejudice.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand, Mr. Speaker, there are only three more bills on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 20738. An act for the transfer of the so-called Olmstead lands in the State of North Carolina from the Solicitor of the Treasury to the Secretary of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 120. Joint resolution authorizing Charles F. Riddell, cashier in the office of the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, to draw checks, requisitions, and execute all papers necessary to obtain money appropriated for the salaries and mileage of Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners of the House of Representatives until the election of the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives.

HERBERT THOMPSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1293) for the relief of Herbert Thompson.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Virginia Trust Co., of Richmond, Va., guardian of Herbert Thompson, minor and only child of Charles J. Thompson, deceased, the sum of $701.12, in full compensation for the loss of his father, late a master rigger at the Norfolk Navy Yard, and who was killed by an accident while in line of duty on September 14, 1899, while engaged in removing the battery of the U. S. S. Newport, at the navy yard in Norfolk, Va.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

KATE FERRELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5287) for the relief of Kate Ferrell.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Kate Ferrell, widow of John Ferrell, the sum of $1,080, this being the amount of the annual salary of the said John Ferrell, who at the time of his death was an employee of the Bureau of Mines, and came to his death on January 19, 1912, in a mine at Cherry Valley, Washington County, Pa., while engaged under the direction of the Bureau of Mines, in the hazardous employment and work of exploring said mine filled with poisonous gases.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas]. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ALESSANDRO COMBA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4180) for the relief of Alessandro Comba.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Alessandro Comba the sum of $500, on account of injuries received while in the employ of the United States under the supervision and direction of the Isthmian Canal Commission, on the Isthmus of Panama, on the 21st day of September, 1907.

SEC. 2. That there be, and there is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500 for the purposes of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a case where the committee has increased the compensation. The man lost both legs, and, of course, was incapacitated for permanent employment, and was in the hospital for a long time. Col. Goethals recommended that he be paid $500, he having been injured on canal work. The Secretary of War recommended that he be paid $500. The Italian ambassador asked that he be paid $500. The Senate passed the bill at $500. I am quite willing it should pass the House at $500, but the committee with a largeness of heart proposes to make it $1,500. If they are willing to have it passed at $500 I will not object.

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. This is a unanimous report of the committee. The committee examined the case carefully and believed that $500 was in no sense adequate for a man crippled for life. He lost both legs while employed on the Canal Zone and in line of duty. It is true he would receive only $500 if he fell within the provisions of the general law which was passed since the accident. I am in favor of giving these workmen in hazardous employment of the Government fair treatment when they meet with accidents.

Mr. MANN. No one is personally interested in the bill.

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. The man had both legs cut off and was in the hospital about two years and a half. He lay in a hospital on the zone for a long time, and was then taken to Ellis Island for treatment and was there for a long time, and was finally deported to his native country—Italy. Because he was an Italian citizen and was working on the canal and seriously injured is no reason why we should not treat him justly and honestly. I am in favor of giving the man fair treatment.

Mr. MANN. I examined the facts in the case and have no criticism to make of the committee.

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. The Italian ambassador presented the case to the committee afterwards and said that $500 was a very small amount, as his condition was constantly growing worse. The diplomatic correspondence is in the report. He said that the man had been at great expense, that he had a family with several children, and he felt that $1,500 was none too large. The facts are clearly set forth and not in dispute. The man is in a pitiable condition and ought to be equitably and fairly dealt with by this great Government. The condition of the man has grown much worse since the correspondence in the report was had.

Mr. MANN. If this man had been injured while in the employ of the Italian Government he would not have received anything, not a dollar, under the same circumstances. The man's legs can not be replaced, and no compensation can be made which will equal the loss of his legs. He was in the hospital and was cared for by the Government.

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. I ask that the bill go over without prejudice. This poor, unfortunate workman ought to have the amount allowed by the committee, and I trust that it will finally pass for that amount.

Mr. MANN. Of course it will go over without prejudice, if it goes over.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the first committee amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the word "five" and insert "fifteen."

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 1, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "fifteen."

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

H. A. V. POST.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17323) for the relief of Henry A. V. Post.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I ask to have that bill go over.

MARY BEAL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4512) for the relief of Mary Beal.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Mary Beal, of Portsmouth, Va., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000, for injuries sustained by her while in charge of laundry work in the United States Navy Hospital at Portsmouth, Va., on or about the 26th day of May, 1903.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following committee amendment was read:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "three" and insert in lieu thereof the word "one."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion by Mr. UNDERWOOD, to reconsider all the votes by which the several bills were passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills and joint resolution:

H. J. Res. 299. Joint resolution proposing an international maritime conference;

H. R. 20480. An act excepting certain lands in Pennington and Lawrence Counties, S. Dak., from the operation of the provisions of section 4 of an act approved June 11, 1906, entitled "An act to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves";

H. R. 23461. An act authorizing the fiscal court of Pike County, Ky., to construct a bridge across Russell Fork of Big Sandy River at or near Millard, Ky.;

H. R. 20593. An act to authorize the Norfolk & Western Railway Co. to construct sundry bridges across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River;

H. R. 23460. An act authorizing the fiscal court of Pike County, Ky., to construct a bridge across Russell Fork of the Big Sandy River at Marrowbone, Ky.;

H. R. 18849. An act for the relief of the Winnebago Indians of Nebraska and Wisconsin;

H. R. 17681. An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes;

H. R. 22194. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certin soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 23765. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 22867. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 18712. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 22006. An act authorizing the Choctawhatchie River Light & Power Co. to erect a dam across the Choctawhatchie River in Dale County, Ala.;

H. R. 16493. An act to correct the military record of William Z. Norman; and

H. R. 22204. An act granting a right of way to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co., or such successors or assigns as may be approved by the Secretary of War, across the Fort Mason Military Reservation, Cal.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House, in accordance with its previous order, adjourned until Thursday, June 27, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of William E. Carlin, son and administrator of the estate of William Passmore Carlin, against The United States (H. Doc. No. 851), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. FRENCH, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 21888) providing for the sale of the United States unused post-office site at Perth Amboy, N. J., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 921), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. HEALD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 4520) for the relief of Catherine Grimm, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 924), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 21195) for the relief of Sam

Mana, owner of the schooner Moi Wahine, sunk in collision with a Government vessel, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 922), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 21043) for the relief of the owners of the cargo laden aboard the schooner Moi Wahine, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 923), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. STERLING: A bill (H. R. 25508) to amend section 3186 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington: A bill (H. R. 25509) to prevent and punish the desecration, mutilation, or defamation of the flag of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McDERMOTT: Memorial of the Legislature of Illinois, favoring Federal control of waterways of the lower Mississippi Valley, etc.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. STEPHENS of California: Petition of Ladies of the Maccabees of the World, Long Beach, Cal., favoring the giving to the fraternal, trades-union, etc., publications the same postal or mailing rates as the commercial press; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, Los Angeles, Cal., favoring passage of bill creating a board of river regulation for regulating navigable streams; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of the San Francisco Labor Council, San Francisco, Cal., favoring passage of House bill 25103; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WEBB: Petition of business men of Charlotte, N. C., favoring bill giving the Interstate Commerce Commission further power toward controlling the express rates and classifications; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 27, 1912.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., June 27, 1912.

To the Senate:

In the absence of the Vice President and of the President pro tempore of the Senate, by authority of Rule I, I hereby name DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, a Senator from the State of Florida, to perform the duties of the Chair to-day.

AUGUSTUS O. BACON,
President of the Senate pro tempore.

Mr. FLETCHER thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer, and directed that the Journal of the last legislative day's proceedings be read.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to have the Journal read this morning. A number of us have been absent.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Monday last.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have asked that the Journal be read this morning. Some of us who were not here desire to know what the Journal contains. We can spend that much time in hearing it read.

Mr. NELSON. Very well; I withdraw the request.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the Journal, and it was approved.

THE FLAG OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. HEYBURN. I notice in the Journal of the last legislative day that a communication from the Secretary of War, Senate Document No. 856, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. That was in response to a resolution which I offered, and I desire that it shall lie on the table so that I may call it up in the morning hour. I was not able to be here at the time it was referred, but I do not desire that it be referred to a committee, because I wish to address the Senate upon it at an early day. For that reason I ask that the communication be withdrawn from the committee and that it may lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho asks that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the communication and that it may lie on the table. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION AT GHENT, BELGIUM (S. DOC. NO. 863).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of State, submitting an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $25,000 to enable the Government to participate in a universal and international exposition to be held at Ghent, Belgium, from April, 1913, to the end of October, 1913, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate communications from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting certified copies of the findings of fact and conclusions of law filed by the court in the following causes:

Edgar L. Swaine, administrator of the estate of Peter T. Swaine, deceased, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 859);

Lucy May Castor, administratrix of the estate of Thomas Foster Castor, deceased, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 861);

Diantha G. Littlejohn, administratrix of the estate of John Egan, deceased, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 860); and Washington Loan & Trust Co., administrator of the estate of James W. Cuyler, deceased, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 864).

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER presented resolutions adopted by the Swedish Evangelical Mission Covenant, in annual convention at Chicago, Ill., favoring the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by District Council, Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen Society of North America, American Federation of Labor, of New York, remonstrating against the adoption of the so-called literacy-test amendment to the immigration law, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions of the Diocese of New Hampshire, praying for the enactment of legislation to provide medical and sanitary relief for the natives of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented a petition of the Connecticut Avenue Citizens' Association, of the District of Columbia, and a petition of sundry citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the enactment of legislation to maintain the present water rates in the District, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WORKS presented a memorial of members of the National League for Medical Freedom, of Los Gatos, Cal., remonstrating against the establishment of a department of public health, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Pacific Beach, Cal., praying for the establishment of a governmental system of postal express, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Los Angeles, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to create a board of river regulation and to provide a fund for the regulation and control of the flow of navigable rivers, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the People's Church, of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation granting the right of suffrage to the citizens of the Philippine Islands and the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Eureka, Cal., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. JONES presented a petition of sundry citizens of La Crosse, Wash., praying for the establishment of a governmental system of postal express, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. ASHURST. I present a petition signed by a large number of stockmen of Mohave and Yavapai Counties, Ariz., with reference to the so-called leasing and grazing bill. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SELIGMAN, ARIZ., June 22, 1912.

Hon. HENRY ASHURST,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned stockmen of Yavapai and Mohave Counties, Ariz., do respectfully ask you to do everything in your power and influence to assist in having the present leasing grazing bill passed.

This bill, known as the La Follette bill, proposes to lease the Government grazing lands of the western part of the United States or the public domain. The bill is now pending before the Senate of the United States Congress, and we earnestly request you to present this petition to the committee in charge of the bill and use your utmost efforts to have this bill passed before the present session of Congress adjourns.

Sincerely, your petitioners,

J. W. Sullivan, E. L. Paterson, D. L. Williams, Thos. King, Chas. King, Arthur King, M. A. Perkins, N. Perkins, S. Perkins, N. Penteny, Chas. Penteny, Joe Mathie, Albert Mathie, M. L. Boner, J. W. Knootz, John Duke, J. W. Stewart, Clarence Stewart, Rall Stewart, Geo. Carter, J. H. Stevens, Ed. Stevens, Chas. Ridgen, John Hurley, Joseph Campbell, Abe Caufman, Al Sanford, A. L. Nelson, Ed Carrow, John Lawler, Joe Tribble, Robt. Tribble, Lee Cockrell, Ed Haskins, Walter Brown, Le Van Evens, John Markham, Jas. Johnson, Carl Davis, Ray Carr, Dee Nelson, John Neil, W. B. Stevens, M. L. Boner, Henry Bacon, Jones Bishop, Sam Sloan, Geo. Miller, Wm. Epperson, William Ellison, John Simpaon, Geo. Daniels, Dave Kaiser.

Mr. CURTIS presented petitions of sundry citizens of Kansas City, Kans., praying for the establishment of a department of public health, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a memorial signed by 459 members of the Florida Branch of the League for Medical Freedom, remonstrating against the establishment of a department of public health, which was ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 7197) for the relief of the heirs of L. A. Davis; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WORKS:

A bill (S. 7198) granting a pension to Ida A. Mitchell (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 7199) granting a pension to Rebecca J. Murphy (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 7200) granting an increase of pension to Rosa L. Couch (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 7201) granting a pension to Fannie M. Carey; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 7202) fixing the date of reenlistment of Gustav Hertfelder, first-class fireman, United States Navy (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 7203) to provide for homestead entries in national forests; to the Committee on Public Lands.

DRY-FARMING PROCESS.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I desire to introduce a bill to exempt from cancellation and provide for patenting by dry-farming process desert-land entries. It is a very short bill, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD. With the permission of the Senate, if it be in order, I should like to give notice that immediately after the morning business on Tuesday, the 9th of July, if such be the pleasure of the Senate, I shall submit a few remarks with reference to the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not catch the suggestion of the Senator, and I ask what the request was?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request, as the Chair understands, is to introduce a bill and to have the bill printed in the RECORD and lie on the table.

Mr. HEYBURN. I thought I heard something about the bill being printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ASHURST. I should like to have the bill printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think there is no rule permitting that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator from Arizona is entitled to have the bill read, and in that way it will go into the RECORD. Let the Senator request that the bill be read.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is not in order to print the bill in the RECORD without having it read.

Mr. ASHURST. Then I most respectfully ask to have the bill read. It is very short.

The bill (S. 7204) to exempt from cancellation and provide for patenting of desert-land entries reclaimed by dry-farming process was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no desert-land entry heretofore made under the public-land laws for lands shall be canceled or in any wise impaired because of any failure on the part of the entryman to make any annual or final proof falling due upon any such entry prior to December 31, 1913: Provided, however, That patent shall be permitted to issue to any desert-land entry when the proofs disclose that the land embraced within such entry has fairly and in good faith been reclaimed to agricultural or horticultural crops by the dry-farming process.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona gives notice that he will address the Senate on this bill on the 9th of July, and it will lie on the table.

Mr. ASHURST. With the kind permission of the Senate, I will change the notice to Tuesday, the 16th day of July. I feel it is due to the Senate that I should state that my remarks will be very brief, and it is simply because of what I deem to be the great public importance of the bill that I will take the time of the Senate to discuss it. My remarks, as I have said, will be brief, but I do feel that I should say something in support of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will lie on the table.

AMENDMENTS TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL (H. R. 25069).

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 to investigate the treatment of ores and other mineral substances with special reference to the prevention of waste in the mining and the utilization of important mineral resources, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WORKS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,250,000 for necessary improvements in the Colorado River to protect the land and property of Imperial Valley, Cal., from overflow, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SMOOT submitted an amendment providing that hereafter the proviso to the act of July 1, 1898, directing that all bonds, notes, and checks be printed on hand-roller presses, shall not apply to checks, the backs and tints of all United States bonds, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $30,000 to pay the city of Salt Lake, Utah, to assist in defraying the expenses of the International Irrigation Congress to be held in that city September 30, 1912, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PERKINS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $28,000 to enable the Commissioner of the General Land Office to make field examinations of selected lieu lands in California, and to adjudicate the same in the General Land Office, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $41,615 for the protection and improvement of the Mesa Verde National Park, Colo., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following act and joint resolutions:

On June 25, 1912:

S. J. Res. 120. Joint resolution authorizing and directing Charles F. Riddell, cashier in the office of the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, to draw checks, requisitions, and execute all papers necessary to obtain from the United States Treasury the money appropriated for salaries and mileage of Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners of the House of Representatives, and for other purposes.

On June 26, 1912:

S. J. Res. 101. Joint resolution authorizing the appointment of Andrew D. White a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution; and

S. 6479. An act authorizing the St. Louis Southwestern Railway Co. to repair, alter, or rebuild certain bridges in the State of Arkansas.

THE ORGANIZED MILITIA (H. DOC. NO. 852).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Very complete arrangements have been tentatively prepared for the participation in camps and maneuvers of a large portion of the Organized Militia of the United States. Preparation has been made for this most important military instruction both by the United States and by the various States whose Organized Militia will participate. The magnitude of the maneuver plans can be seen when it is estimated that 70,000 officers and enlisted men of the Organized Militia will take part in them during the coming year. Should it be impossible to carry out the contemplated maneuvers it will be at a very great loss of efficiency to the troops concerned and will entail a great disappointment to the thousands of men who, with the maneuvers in view, have been preparing themselves therefor.

In contemplation of the maneuvers it has been necessary already to expend the sum of $80,000 from the unexpended balance of last year's appropriation for maneuver purposes for the Organized Militia, which sum will be lost should the project of maneuvers not be consummated. In addition to this, the various States have made arrangements to expend large amounts from their apportionment from the funds appropriated by Congress under section 1661, Revised Statutes, or from funds appropriated by the State. Without an appropriation by Congress the maneuvers may not be held. I have the honor, therefore, strongly to recommend and urge that the following item, taken from House bill No. 18956 (Army appropriation bill), be enacted separately and specially:

One million three hundred and fifty thousand dollars "Encampment and maneuvers, Organized Militia, 1912–1914."

In addition to the appropriation for the Organized Militia for maneuver purposes it would be necessary that certain amounts be appropriated and made immediately available for the Regular Army to participate with the Organized Militia and aid the latter in the purpose of the maneuvers. This appropriation would total $367,500, and is made up of the following items:

Regular supplies	$160,000
Incidental expenses	4,500
Barracks and quarters	33,000
Army transportation	75,000
Roads and walks, etc	4,000
Water and sewers	57,000
Clothing and equipage	34,000
Total	367,500

The immense importance of the training of the militia leads me again to urge most strongly that the two appropriations mentioned be made available on or before the 2d day of July, 1912, since, unless the maneuvers can be definitely determined upon by that date, the plans for the encampments and maneuvers of a great portion of the Organized Militia of the United States will have to be abandoned.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 24, 1912.

LIEUT. COL. J. F. REYNOLDS LANDIS (S. DOC. NO. 862).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, concerning a silver medal and a diploma awarded by the Italian Government to Lieut. Col. J. F. Reynolds Landis, United States Army, in recognition of services rendered by him at the time of the Messina earthquake.

In accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of State, these papers are submitted to Congress with a view to its decision whether the Secretary of State may be authorized to deliver the medal and diploma to Lieut. Col. Landis.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 27, 1912.

CAPT. FRANK PARKER (S. DOC. NO. 858).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Cuban Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, concerning a decoration of the Order of Military Merit of the Third Class which has been conferred upon Capt. Frank Parker, United States Army, by the President of Cuba in recognition of services rendered by Capt. Parker as military instructor of the rural guard of Cuba.

In accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of State, these papers are submitted to Congress with a view to its decision whether the Secretary of State may be authorized to deliver the decoration to Capt. Parker.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 27, 1912.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 24023) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and that the request of the House for a conference be granted, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. WETMORE, and Mr. FOSTER conferees on the part of the Senate.

ANNIE R. SCHLEY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4568) granting an increase of pension to Annie R. Schley, which was, on page 1, line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred and fifty" and insert "seventy-five."

Mr. McCUMBER. In the absence of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], I ask that the bill and amendment of the House of Representatives lie on the table until his return.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5623) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, which was, on page 4, to strike out lines 9 to 12, inclusive.

Mr. McCUMBER. I inquire what are the lines stricken out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the paragraph of the bill stricken out by the House.

The Secretary read as follows:

The name of Anne Jones Banks, widow of William Banks, late of Capt. William M. Allred's company, Nauvoo Legion, Utah Volunteers, Utah Indian War, and pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that——

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to make the point of order that under the unanimous-consent agreement a motion to concur can not be made. That would be to pass the bill, and would be legislative business.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator is correct in regard to that; but I was not going to move to concur.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the point of order well taken.

Mr. McCUMBER. I was not going to move to concur, but simply that conferees be appointed. Probably, however, even that motion would not be in order, although I observe that in the case of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill conferees were appointed. I think, Mr. President, that all the pension bills amended by the House had better lie on the table until next Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills will lie on the table.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to make a suggestion. I was in some doubt when the conferees were appointed on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill (H. R. 24023) as to whether that was not in violation of the unanimous-consent agreement. That period of the consideration of a bill often provokes considerable discussion. I do not raise any point against it, but it is no part of the morning business and I merely make that suggestion.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I desire to say a word with regard to the appointment of the conferees in the case of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. It was not the intention in moving that conferees be appointed to perfect or present any conference report until next week. Debate and action usually take place in connection with the presentation of the conference report, but I should presume, unless I am reminded otherwise by something not now evident, that morning business would carry with it the receipt of messages from the House and the reference of a bill to a conference committee, the same as if a bill were introduced and referred to one of the regular committees of the Senate. Of course the appointment of the conferees is not a matter of voting, but the custom is to take the senior Senators who have served on the subcommittee and appoint them conferees. I only wanted, of course, to carry out what I thought was the morning business of the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not intend to raise any objection that would embarrass the Senate at all; but I was of the opinion at the time the unanimous-consent agreement was entered into that it should have been better protected. Of course the conferees should be appointed, but clearly their appointment was not in accord with the unanimous-consent agreement.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Monday next, at the close of the routine morning business, I will ask the Senate to consider the Indian appropriation bill, being House bill 20728. I observe that notice has been given for the same time for the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, and I desire to say that the giving of the notice of the intention to ask for the consideration of the two bills on that day is not to be taken as suggesting any differences whatever between those who have them in charge.

Mr. HEYBURN. The original notice, as appears from the calendar, for the consideration of that bill was June 27. I understand the Senator has already given notice to that effect. Is this intended to be an original notice in lieu of any notice heretofore given?

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, I do not know whether it is or not. There are several objections going to be made to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, and, in order that Senators may know when the bill will come up, I give this notice.

THE CHEMICAL SCHEDULE.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, I too desire to give a notice. It is that on next Monday, when the Senate resumes business, I shall endeavor to have the Senate proceed immediately to the consideration of the chemical-schedule bill (H. R. 20182). In the absence of Senators a unanimous-consent agreement, or what appears to be one, was obtained which undertook to confine the consideration of the chemical tariff bill to one calendar day. I think there will be some difficulty in enforcing that agreement, because it is my intention to discuss that measure when the order of the unfinished business is reached on that day; and, if the unfinished business is laid aside, it will be by a vote and not by unanimous consent. I merely give that notice.

Mr. CLAPP. Some time ago—in fact, very soon after the Indian appropriation bill was reported—I gave notice that I would ask for its consideration, and continued the notice from day to day. It is an appropriation bill, and I think Senators are desirous of getting the appropriation bills through the Senate and into conference. So I give this notice this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning business is closed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. McCUMBER. It seems to me that that is not morning business. I understood that nothing but morning business would be considered.

Mr. GALLINGER. I withdraw the motion, although I think it is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate adjourn, to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. HEYBURN. Why make it 11? I should like to inquire why the Senate——

Mr. GALLINGER. I have made my motion.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move to amend by making the hour of meeting 12 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire has moved that the Senate adjourn to meet on Monday next at 11 o'clock. The Senator from Idaho moves to amend by making the hour 12 o'clock. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Idaho.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the original motion made by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 42 minutes a. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, July 1, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 27, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art supremely wise and strong and good, Father of our souls, dispenser of all its needs, fill our hearts with the Christ spirit that Thy will may dominate our thoughts and acts, that whatsoever may confront us we may be able to say, "Nevertheless not my will but Thine be done." That Thy plans and purposes may be fulfilled in us to the glory and honor of Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, June 24, 1912, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McClintock, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 24023) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. WETMORE, and Mr. FOSTER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 27, 1912.

NATIONAL BUDGET (H. DOC. NO. 854).

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I send herewith the report of the Commission on Economy and Efficiency on "The need for a national budget." The recommendations contained therein are approved by me. I recommend to the Congress the enactment of the legislation necessary to put them into effect.

The subject is one of fundamental importance to the Executive as well as to the Congress. Notwithstanding the magnitude and complexity of the business which is each year conducted by the executive branch and financed by the Congress, and the vital relation which each governmental activity bears to the welfare of the people, there is at present no provision for reporting revenues, expenditures, and estimates for appropriations in such manner that the Executive, before submitting estimates, and each Member of Congress, and the people, after estimates have been submitted, may know what has been done by the Government or what the Government proposes to do.

Briefly stated, the situation is this: Under the Constitution (and subject to its limitations) Congress is made responsible for determining the following questions of policy: What business or work the Government shall undertake; what shall be the organization under the Executive which is charged with executing its policies; what amount of funds and by what means funds shall be provided for each activity or class of work; what shall be the character of expenditures authorized for carrying on each class of work—i. e., how much for expenses, how much for capital outlays, etc.

As a means of definitely locating this responsibility, Congress was given the sole power to levy taxes; to borrow money on the credit of the United States; to authorize money to be drawn from the Treasury. To the President also has been given very definite responsibility. To the end that Congress may effectively discharge its duties the article of the Constitution dealing with legislative power provided that "a regular statement and account of receipts and expenditures of all public moneys shall be published"; and the article dealing with the Executive power requires the President "from time to time to give to the Congress information on the state of the Union and to recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall deem necessary and expedient."

Notwithstanding these specific constitutional requirements, there has been relatively little attention given to the working out of an adequate and systematic plan for considering expenditures and estimates for appropriations, for regularly stating these in such form that they may be considered in relation to questions of public policy, and for presenting to Congress for their consideration each year, when requests are made for funds, any definite plan or proposal for which the administration may be held responsible.

Regular committees on expenditure have been established by the Congress for the purpose of obtaining knowledge of conditions through special investigations. During the last century over 100 special congressional investigations have been authorized to obtain information which should have been regularly submitted, and much money as well as much time has been spent by the Congress in its effort to obtain information about matters that should be laid before them as an open book; many statutes have been passed governing the manner in which reports of expenditures shall be made; specific rules have been laid down giving the manner in which estimates shall be submitted to Congress and considered by it. From time to time special investigations have been made by heads of executive departments. During the last century many such investigations have been carried on and much money has been spent in the conduct of these, as well as by Congress, for the purpose of obtaining facts as a basis for intelligent consideration of methods and procedure of doing business with a view to increasing economy and efficiency. From time to time Executive orders have been issued and reorganizations have taken place.

Generally speaking, however, the only conclusions which may be reached from all of this are that—

No regular or systematic means has been provided for the consideration of the detail and concrete problems of the Government.

A well-defined business or work program for the Government has not been evolved.

The reports of expenditures required by law are unsystematic, lack uniformity of classification, and are incapable of being summarized so as to give to Congress, to the President, or to the people a picture of what has been done and of cost in terms either of economy of purchase or efficiency of organization in obtaining results.

The summaries of expenditures required by law to be submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, with estimates, not only do not provide the data necessary to the consideration of questions of policy, but they are not summarized and classified on the same basis as the estimates.

The report on revenues is not in any direct way related to the expenditures, except as the Secretary of the Treasury estimates a surplus or deficiency, and this estimate is based on accounts which do not accurately show expenditures or outstanding liabilities to be met.

Instead of the President being made responsible for estimates of expenditures, the heads of departments and establishments are made the ministerial agents of Congress, the President being called on only to advise Congress how, in his opinion, expenditures may be reduced or revenues may be increased in case estimated expenditures exceed estimated revenues.

The estimates do not raise for consideration questions which should be decided before appropriations are granted, nor does the form in which estimates are required to be presented by the Congress lay the foundation for the consideration of subjects of work to be done, the character of organization best adapted to performing work, the character of expenditures to be made, the best method of financing expenditures.

The present law governing the preparation and submission of estimates, requiring them to be submitted each year in the same form as the year before, was passed without due consideration as to what information should be had before Congress as a basis for action, the result being that the unsystematic and confused method before in use was made continuous.

The rules of the Congress do not provide for the consideration of estimates in such manner that any Member of Congress, any committee, or either House of Congress as a whole may have before it at any one time the information needed for the effective consideration of a program of work done or to be done.

The committee organization is largely the result of historical development rather than of the consideration of present needs.

Inadequate provision is made for getting before each committee to which appropriations are referred all of the data necessary for the consideration of work to be done, organization provided for doing work, character of expenditures, or method of financing.

Following the method at present prescribed, the estimates submitted by each organization unit may have to be split up for consideration by appropriation committees of the Congress and be made the subject of several different bills; in few places are all of the estimates or appropriations asked for by a single organization unit brought together.

The estimates for appropriations requested for a single class of work are similarly divided, no provision being made for considering the amount asked for, the amount appropriated, or the amount spent for a single general class of governmental activity.

Generally speaking, the estimates for expenses (or cost of each definite class of services to be rendered) are not separately shown from estimates for capital outlays (or cost of land, buildings, equipment, and other properties acquired).

While the classification and summaries of estimates do indicate a proposed method of financing, these summaries do not show classes of work or the character of expenditures provided for, and therefore can not lay the foundation for the consideration of methods of financing as a matter of governmental policy as is contemplated under the Constitution.

The appropriations are just as unsystematic and incapable of classification and summary as the estimates; in fact, follow the same general form, making it difficult and in many cases impossible to determine what class of work has been authorized, how much may be spent for each class, or the character of expenditures to be made; nor does any one bill cover the total authorizations for any particular general class of work.

Bills for appropriations (the authorizations to incur liabilities and to spend) are not considered by the committee to which measures for raising revenues and borrowing money are referred, nor are revenues and borrowings considered by committees on appropriations in relation to the funds which will be available.

So long as the method at present prescribed obtains, neither the Congress nor the country can have laid before it a definite understandable program of business or of governmental work to be financed; nor can it have a well-defined, clearly expressed financial program to be followed; nor can either the Congress or the Executive get before the country the proposals of each in such manner as to locate responsibility for plans submitted or for results.

Although the President has the power to install new and improved systems of accounts and to require that information be presented to him each year in such form that he and his Cabinet may intelligently consider proposals or estimates, although the President, under the Constitution, may submit to the Congress each year a definite well-considered budget, with a message calling attention to subjects of immediate importance, to do this without the cooperation of the Congress in the repeal of laws which would be conflicting, and in the enactment of other laws which would place upon the heads of departments duties to be performed that would be in harmony with such procedure would entail a large expenditure of public money in duplication of work.

The purpose of the report which is submitted is to suggest a method whereby the President, as the constitutional head of the administration, may lay before the Congress and the Congress may consider and act on a definite business and financial program; to have the expenditures, appropriations, and estimates so classified and summarized that their broad significance may be readily understood; to provide each Member of Congress, as well as each citizen who is interested, with such data pertaining to each subject of interest that it may be considered in relation to each question of policy which should be gone into before an appropriation for expenditures is made; to have these general summaries supported by such detail information as is necessary to consider the economy and efficiency with which business has been transacted; in short, to suggest a plan whereby the President and Congress may cooperate—the one in laying before the Congress and the country a clearly expressed administrative program to be acted on, the other in laying before the President a definite enactment to be acted on by him. Included in this report are summaries of expenditures for the year 1911, summaries of appropriations for the fiscal year 1912, and summaries of estimates of appropriations for the fiscal year 1913. To these summaries your special attention is invited. Attached is also an appendix containing a digest of laws pertaining to appropriations and allotments, to the preparation of estimates, and to forms of reporting expenditures; also the suggested pro forma draft of budget, which has been prepared by the commission and is submitted for your consideration as a matter bearing very directly on the economy and efficiency with which Government business is carried on.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 27, 1912.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, for how long a time is that?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the adjournment will be until Monday next, July 1.

Mr. McCALL. Has the order for that been adopted?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAY). The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. McCALL rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to demand a division upon that motion. I want to ask the gentleman from Alabama a question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the order was agreed upon in the House between the minority leader and myself on the floor of the House, together with the Members present at that time, that no business should be transacted to-day. I therefore insist upon my motion.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask the gentleman from Alabama whether any provision had been made for running the Government in those departments where the appropriations have not been passed for the next fiscal year.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order upon this motion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The House has made provision, but unfortunately the Senate has not. Mr. Speaker, I insist upon my motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, July 1, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

SENATE.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

Mr. BACON took the chair as President pro tempore under the order of the Senate of June 12, 1912.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

THE LAWRENCE (MASS.) STRIKE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, transmitting, in response to a resolution of May 7, 1912, a report of the investigation of the recent strike at Lawrence, Mass., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

CHARLES H. QUACKENBUSH (S. DOC. NO. 866).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of May 13, 1912, the correspondence in the possession of the Post Office Department relating to the discharge of Charles H. Quackenbush from the Railway Mail Service and his reinstatement, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK (S. DOC. NO. 871).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of April 2, 1912, an estimate prepared by Capt. C. H. Knight, Corps of Engineers, relative to the cost of new roads in Yellowstone National Park.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to have the communication printed with the illustrations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be printed with the illustrations. To what committee is it desired that it should be referred?

Mr. HEYBURN. It should not go to any committee. It is in response to a resolution which I offered calling for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Such communications are usually referred to some committee.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let it lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will lie on the table, without objection.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6847) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, which was, on page 2, line 15, to strike out "Stotler" and insert "Statler."

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5623) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House and ask a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. BURNHAM, and Mr. GORE conferees on the part of the Senate.

IMPERIAL VALLEY, CAL. (S. DOC. NO. 867).

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, a few days ago I offered an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill for the improvement of the Colorado River to prevent the overflow of land in the Imperial Valley. This is a matter of urgency. The appropriation has been urged by the Secretary of the Interior and has been recommended by a special message of the President.

I have here a statement showing the necessity for the improvement that is sought to be made. I move that the statement be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, to accompany the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

EXPENSES IN PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGNS.

Mr. WORKS. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask that it be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 350), as follows:

Whereas it is asserted and has been charged on the floor of the Senate and elsewhere that large sums of money have been furnished to and used by candidates for the office of President of the United States by the various candidates for that office to control the presidential primary elections in the different States, and otherwise, to secure the election of delegates to the national conventions of the Republican and Democratic Parties; and

Whereas it is well known that many persons drawing salaries or other compensation from the Government for services as public officials or employees, from the President, Cabinet officers, and United States Senators down, have been using the time for which they have been paid by the Government in campaigning for themselves and others and aiding as campaign managers and otherwise during this session of Congress, and in the endeavor to influence and control the primary elections in the various States for the election of delegates and the nomination of candidates for President of the United States: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That a committee of seven Senators, four Republicans and three Democrats, be appointed by the Vice President a special committee to investigate, inquire into, and report to the Senate the following facts:

1. What amount of money has been subscribed, paid, or furnished to or for the use of each and every candidate for the nomination as a candidate for President of the United States, both Republican and Democratic, or to their and each of their managers, treasurers, auditors, committees, agents, or friends, or paid out or subscribed in aid or support of his candidacy, directly or indirectly, and the amount paid out by such candidate himself for such purpose, giving the name of each such candidate, the amount subscribed, paid, and used for or in aid of his candidacy, by whom paid, subscribed, or furnished, directly or indirectly, the name of each person or corporation by whom subscribed, furnished, or paid, and in behalf of which candidate; the amount paid by each person; the total amount subscribed, paid, and furnished to or in aid of the candidacy of each of such candidates; the amount of money paid out by or in aid of the candidacy of each such candidates and for what purpose, in detail, and the total amount subscribed, paid, or furnished to or for and paid out by all such candidates.

2. What persons engaged in the campaign by and for each of such candidates or in aid thereof, in whatever mode or form, were under salary or other pay of the Government, in what capacity, the amount of compensation paid each of them, the amount of time devoted by each of them, including the candidates themselves, and the total amount of money paid by the Government to such persons and the aggregate amount paid to all of them for the time consumed by them all in conducting, carrying on, or in any way aiding in the conduct of such political campaign, giving the amount so paid for workers of all kinds for all of said candidates, giving them separately.

3. The proportion or percentage of the registered and qualified voters voting at the presidential primary elections in each of the States, giving the Republican and Democratic percentage of votes cast separately, and the total vote cast at such election in each of the States, giving the Republican and Democratic votes separately.

4. The amount of money paid to newspapers and other publications and periodicals and newspaper and other writers for services of any and every kind rendered by said newspapers and other publications and periodicals and writers in aid or support of each and every candidate for such office; the names of such newspapers and other publications and writers and the amount paid to each, directly or indirectly, whether for additional subscriptions or otherwise; the amount paid by, for, or on account of any such candidate in the aggregate, and the whole amount so paid by all of such candidates to all of such newspapers, publications, or periodicals.

5. The cost to the candidates and each of them, and of the delegates attending the same, of the national convention for the nomination of candidates for President of the United States, and each of them, and for what purpose moneys were paid and used at each such convention, and particularly whether the expenses of any delegate to such convention, or either of them, were paid, either in whole or in part, by anyone other than themselves, and if so, by whom and in what amounts and on what terms and conditions, if any.

6. In what States corrupt-practice acts have been enacted applicable to primary elections and, in general terms, the provisions of each of said acts and the penalties imposed for the violation thereof.

That said committee be authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate and during any recess of the Senate or of Congress; to hold sessions at such place or places as it shall deem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation; to employ stenographers; to send for persons and papers; to administer oaths; and to report the results of its investigations, including all testimony taken by it, and that the expenses of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have been an earnest advocate of the direct and presidential primaries. I believe they are necessary to the preservation of the rights of the people and the prevention of fraud and corruption in elections. I believe they will have that effect if rightly and honestly conducted. They have been on trial for the past few months. I think it is time to take account of stock and see what they have profited us.

We have just passed through a campaign in both of the great parties for the nomination of candidates for President of the United States. No American citizen can look back upon it without the blush of shame. Candidates for that great office have gone on the stump and canvassed for their own election. That was shame enough. But one of them was President of the United States and another an ex-President, pitted against each other. Their campaign was undignified, malicious, and disgraceful. It was not a discussion of principles or an effort to inform or instruct the people, but consisted of personal attacks and counterattacks, criminations and recriminations. If half the things they said of each other were true, neither of them was fit to be nominated. The whole country was shocked at this unexampled spectacle. The people were humiliated and indignant. It was openly charged on the stump and on the floor of the Senate that enormous sums of money were being used to carry the election. The people have a right to know whether this charge is true or not. They have a right to know whether the direct primaries can be controlled by the use of money, as we all know the caucus and convention can be controlled and corrupted. If they can, if the masses of the people can not be trusted and their votes can be had for money, the last hope of maintaining the institutions of the country free and uncorrupted has vanished. The hope of the country rests upon the integrity and patriotism of the people.

We all know that public officials, paid by the Government, from the President down, have given their time, that the people are paying for, in carrying on the campaigns of the various candidates. The people have a right to know how much of the time paid for by them has been used in conducting, managing, and manipulating politics in the interest of candidates. They have a right to know, too, how much it cost to hold the nominating conventions and who put up the money for these expenses. The enormous sums of money expended in political contests has become one of the crying evils of the time. This country has every right to be informed on these subjects. In other words, the people have a right to know how much it costs them, in money and time, to nominate a candidate for President, and how much the candidates and their supporters have paid in the attempt to secure the nominations. It is information that touches the very vitals of our systems, new and old, of nominating candidates for President.

We have tried both the direct primaries and conventions in this campaign. The national convention at Chicago was a fitting sequel to the campaign that preceded it. It was full of malice and hatred. Charges of fraud and corruption were openly and loudly made. The nomination made is tainted with the belief of thousands of people that it was procured by unjust, fraudulent, and illegal means. And now we have a torn and dismembered party and the prospect of a new one. The movement for a new party is founded upon hatred, revenge, and ambition. The Democratic Party is torn with the same dissentions, the result of like causes.

What is the duty before us in this condition of discord and unrest? The people are going to rule this country. Of that we may be assured. If they can not do it through the instrumentalities of the old parties, they will have a new one. They will no longer be ruled by political bosses and privilege-seeking corporations. But we do not need a new party in California. The Republican Party in my State is decent and respectable. Five years ago California was one of worst boss-ridden States in the Union. It was owned and controlled by the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. and its hired bosses and corruptionists.

The question confronted us there, as it is confronting Republicans of the whole Nation to-day, Shall we form a new party to meet this consuming evil, or shall we undertake to free and redeem the old one? We chose the latter course. We succeeded beyond our fondest hopes. The good people of the State, Democrats and Republicans alike, came to the rescue. It was not a question of party, but of political freedom and civic righteousness. As a result the people and not the bosses have control of the party and the State government. They have complete control of the party organization. The Southern Pacific machine has retired from business. The State has the best and purest government in its history. We are not ready yet to surrender this redeemed and purified party to the old machine and embark in the perilous venture of a new party. When we do we want it to be a party founded on principle and the best interests of the public welfare. We want no political bosses or privilege seekers, who are looking for the loaves and fishes, to govern or control it, but men of courage and patriotism who are willing to sacrifice their standing and interest in the old party to the public good. But are we ready now for such a party? Is it necessary? Are we willing to surrender and give over the old party, with all its achievements and traditions, to the men who have brought it to the brink of ruin? Are we ready to give up the fight the Progressives have been making for a free and untrammeled party? Not yet. The fight has just begun, and the people have been winning battle after battle against the interests. Many of the States have already shaken off the shackles of boss rule and become free. So may all the others, and so they will if their leaders are faithful and vigilant.

I can remember when a mere boy shouting for Abraham Lincoln in his first campaign. Later, when still a boy, I took my place with thousands of others in the ranks of the Army formed to maintain the principles of freedom upon which the Republican Party was founded. I cast my first vote for Ulysses S. Grant, who led that Army to ultimate victory. I have cast my vote with that party in national affairs until now. Now I am called upon to make my choice between the old party and a new one to be formed. The temptation is great. The provocation is almost overwhelming. This is a time when men should search their own consciences and their motives unmoved by anger or passion and do what seems to each of them to be his patriotic duty to the whole people. I shall not shirk my own individual responsibility or question the motives of others who may take a different course. As conditions now present themselves to my mind, I can not join a new party movement. But, Mr. President, I do not want to be misunderstood by the Senate or by the country. It does not follow, from what I have said, that I shall support the alleged nominee of the Republican convention. I believe he secured his nomination by unjust and illegal means. I do not believe that he is the nominee of the party in any just or proper sense. I hope he does not realize, in accepting such a nomination, what thousands and thousands of his party believe to be the fact—that it was procured for him by compromising with fraud and corruption and the violation of an express statute of a State. But its alleged nominee is not the Republican Party. He does not represent its principles or its sentiments. His title to the nomination is tainted and questioned by the great mass of the party. Neither I nor any other Republican who views the situation and believes as I do owe him, personally, any political allegiance or support. If any good Republican representing the real sentiments of the party were to become an independent candidate, running on a progressive platform that he could conscientiously stand upon, the voters of the party would sustain him; but in my judgment the man who attempts to form a new party, as conditions now are, will not be serving the interests of the people. Better far to see the great Republican Party go down to temporary defeat now for the sins its leaders have committed, and redeem it four years hence, than attempt the uncertain and dangerous remedy of forming a new party. Better, for the time being, to "bear the ills we have than fly to others that we know not of." The party had already been purged in many of the States of its worst and most dangerous elements. Many of the members of the national committee who made possible the nomination that was brought about had been repudiated in advance by the voters of their States. This victory was thrown away by the delegates chosen to represent the progressive element of the party in the convention, a victory that would in all probability have taken the control of that committee out of the hands of the powers that manipulated it at the convention. Four years from now, if we stand to our guns and do not follow after false gods, the people will have complete control over the Republican Party in the Nation, as it now has in many of the States.

Mr. President, this struggle for political freedom and civic righteousness is not confined to the Republican Party. Its great rival, the Democratic Party, has the same fight with the powers of evil; and one man, with a courage and patriotism that challenges my admiration and respect and should incite the gratitude of the American people, is bravely fighting for the integrity and righteousness of his party and fighting practically single handed and alone. He is making the fight that every good and loyal citizen should be making, not outside but inside of his party. If that effort, rightly made, fails, it will be time enough to form a new party. If it does fail, no one will be more ready than I to form that new party, founded on principles of justice, liberty, purity, and honesty in politics.

Mr. President, I have offered these resolutions so that the people may, so far as it can be ascertained by such an inquiry as they call for, be informed as to what has brought us to this present pass, so far as the campaign just closed is concerned.

I understand the Vice President is not likely to be present for some time to come. I desire, therefore, to amend my resolution, where it authorizes the appointment by the Vice President, so as to read "by the President pro tempore of the Senate."

I desire further to say that in view of the limited attendance this morning I shall not insist upon pressing the resolution at the present time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be modified as suggested by the Senator from California.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that under the law the resolution will necessarily go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. WORKS. I was about to suggest that it take its regular course and go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is necessary that that be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution necessarily will be so referred.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, before the close of morning business, if I may be indulged, in order briefly and imperfectly to do what should be done with care and elaboration, I will interpose a demurrer to the statement read by the Senator from California. I do not desire that it should be taken as accepted by Republicans.

I shall not occupy any considerable time. Not having the resolution of the Senator from California in print, and not having known that such a motion would be made, it will, of course, be somewhat difficult to cover the subject. I shall not undertake to do that.

An attack has been made in this resolution upon the integrity of the President of the United States as an incumbent and as a candidate for reelection. Concurrently an attack has been made upon those who are responsible for his nomination. Still further an attack has been made upon the integrity of the Republicans of this Nation.

Mr. GALLINGER. And upon Members of this body who are upon the national committee.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; and as suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire, who sits on my left, upon Members of this body who chance to be members of the national committee. More than that, with an ever-widening circle of slander, an attack has been made upon the citizenship of the country at large.

It is charged, in effect, that the standard of the citizenship of this country is so low and so venal that it may be bought and sold like chattels in the markets; that it may be controlled by corrupt men. This resolution undertakes to stamp a character of degradation, inefficiency, and corruption upon the citizenship of this country to the extent that it controls the Government. The man who can be corrupted is as bad a citizen as the man who corrupts him or attempts to do so. There is no difference under any rule of morals or of law.

So this resolution charges that these people constituting the citizenship have been subject, for a period not named, to the dominion and control and manipulation of corruption and corrupt men. I deny it. I challenge any man, responsible for this resolution or otherwise, to hand in to the Secretary of the Senate and have read from the desk the names of five men that within his knowledge come within the class of debauched citizenship.

No man should be allowed to slander another, even in political excitement or campaigns, without being held responsible. The offense of slandering the American citizenship, singly or in the aggregate, is as heinous a crime as that of attempting to bribe them. It is usually indulged in for the purpose of compelling some one to do or not to do something—heaping opprobrium and epithets upon your fellow citizen in order to deter him or to influence him one way or the other.

The statement in the resolution that an unhappy condition of affairs has existed in the country is true in a very large measure. It did not emanate from the rank and file or the leadership of either party, singly and alone. Whatever of the unhappy conditions pictured in this resolution have existed are the result of an attempt—an irresponsible and unwise attempt—to change overnight the form of this Government and the manner of the performance of the political duties of citizenship. Where there is no meeting or coming together of men there can be no riot. Where the opportunity is not given or accorded them to violate long-established principles the principles are safe.

It is not necessary to take up the resolution in detail and analyze it, because it is all based upon one wrong, vicious proposition. To stand in the Senate of the United States and charge that Members of this body, in the performance of their individual citizenship, have participated in disreputable and dishonest procedure in a national convention is intolerable, and if such a charge is made it should be accompanied by the names of those charged.

We have a rule in this body which precludes any Member from speaking disrespectfully of another. We have a rule in this body which precludes any Member from charging another with improper motives. It may be said that that applies only to his actions in the body. I hold that it applies to the action of the Senator, because he is a Senator of the United States wherever he is during the tenure of his office.

What a document that would be to read in the public schools of the United States! As well take in the infected flag of smallpox or cholera. It is a more serious offense to poison the minds of the children and the students of the country than it is to infect them with a disease. The mind, once tainted, never is restored to perfect health. A suggestion of dishonor made against the representative bodies of the people of the country is never eradicated from the mind of the child.

If it is said that the charges are true, why investigate them? No man should say that these charges are true unless he can stand in his place and show that they are true by giving the day, date, data, and names. The things charged in that document are crimes. They are crimes against the law of citizenship; they are crimes against the law of the land. There should be no necessity for an investigation of such a charge by a committee.

What would be the result? Send out a committee of this body to travel up and down the land for months and months, sitting in various places, with its daily proceedings made the subject matter of newspaper quibble and comment, charge and vituperation, and you had as well send the trailing bag of infectious disease from one end of the country to the other to poison the air. There is nothing more important than that the minds of the people of the country, especially of the youth and those whose minds are in process of formation, should remain untainted by a charge coming from a responsible body.

It is bad enough to be confronted with irresponsible slander, but it is infinitely worse to be confronted by a charge coming with the sanction of the Senate of the United States for investigation in the local communities of the United States. The committee would succeed in procuring conjecture, uncertainty, but would any man come before the committee and make a definite charge? If he would, he is accessible now without this public exhibition of irresponsible charges.

The thing to be desired is that whatever has occurred during these political contests shall be buried in oblivion as soon as possible, that most of the men shall be forgotten at the earliest possible moment. The names of men who engage in disgraceful conduct in the performance of public duty ought not to be remembered overnight. No man is entitled to fame because of his misbehavior.

This, if it is calculated for anything more than another, is calculated to perpetuate the consideration of the evil deeds of evil men. We do not want that kind of history written. We want to write only the history of the good deeds of good men, and how much of it would be found in the report of this committee? It does not ask that the committee shall investigate lawful deeds of men engaged in lawful proceedings. It is a little on the order of the journalism of the day. I have not seen in any paper any statement as to the good deeds of a man in display type at the head of a column. I have not noticed any reference to the class of men who do good deeds except, perhaps, in obituary. Would this committee sit under the resolution to hear the facts in regard to really great and pure statesmen actuated by high motives of statesmanship? It does not ask that they shall do it, and they have no jurisdiction. It is simply a dragnet in search of crime, in search of the disreputable, in search of that which should be forever hid.

Now, Mr. President, it is not a subject to elaborate on very much, in my judgment. It contains suggestions and innuendoes enough to wipe out every good and patriotic impulse in the mind and breast of every child in the land. A suggestion that those things are true to those who are studying the institutions and learning the lesson of citizenship is a blot upon their life. I care not what are the politics of the officials who are charged irresponsibly, against whom a suggestion is made that if you will enter into this investigation you will probably find that they are disreputable. I would like the man to stand up before us and make the charge. I like the habit when a man commences to tell you in confidence something to the detriment of another to say, "Wait; I will call him up on the phone that I may have him here and listen to the conversation." I have stopped a good many conferences of that kind in that way.

Let any man making those charges give the names, and in the presence of those whose names he gives take the chances. If he will not, the charge ought not to be made. Let us elevate the standard of citizenship so that there will be no possibility of such a condition as is presented here this morning.

I am not going to consider the question whether or not there will be two parties or three parties or many parties in the coming campaign. The man whose mind is bent on considering that question as paramount loses sight of the principles for which parties stand. The Republican Party at Chicago has redeemed itself in its tariff declaration. We do not find within that platform the old saw about the difference between the cost of production abroad and at home. That absurdity is eliminated. It is a perfect tariff plank, except for one little joke in it, which suggests that some duties are too high. I think so. I think myself the duty of beeswax and curled feathers might be reduced. I am not afraid to meet a platform anywhere in considering the question of adjusting business relations between the American people and the people of other countries. I do not know what kind of a plank will come over from Baltimore. I do not know that I am very much interested in it, because a man can not ride in two cars at the same time, and he can not vote two tickets at the same election—that is, I do not think he can.

This resolution leaves the people up in the air, with nothing beneath their feet. It does not advise supporting either party. It rather intimates that there may come a deliverer out of Israel.

Now, Mr. President, I have said more than I intended to say, but I feel that a resolution like that should not go through in a perfunctory manner, be referred to a committee as though it were something serious, reported by a committee as though it were worthy of consideration, and considered in the Senate as though we were here to spend our time in the consideration of such a matter. I hope that the committee will be supplied with a proper undertaker for burial services.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, this resolution has been regularly referred, and I am not going to take up the time of the Senate now in discussing the merits of it.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] has made a resolution of his own and discussed it quite elaborately, not the resolution offered by me. Evidently he did not pay attention to the reading and has not read the resolution itself. The resolution does not charge anybody with anything. It is purely and simply a resolution calling for inquiry as to the truth of the charges that have been made by somebody else, and made on the floor of the Senate, not by me, not by the resolution. It calls for an inquiry into the truth of the facts that have been spread all over the country, not only as emanating from the floor of the Senate of the United States, but charges that were made in the political campaign over and over again affecting the integrity of the Republican Party and those who are connected with it.

Now, who should object to the truth being known about it? The best way to overcome the evil is to disclose it and then handle it. That is just what we have to do with the affairs of the Government and in politics to-day if we are going to accomplish anything.

It was charged, Mr. President, on the floor of the Senate within a very short time, that millions of dollars had been expended to control this campaign. It was said upon the floor of the Senate that a Member of this body had made that same charge on the stump throughout the country. All sorts of charges were made during the continuance of the Republican convention. How much of them were true, how much of them were false, none of us know. But I say, Mr. President—and I say it in all sincerity—that the people of this country have a right to know whether these charges are true or false and the Senate of the United States, standing as a representative of the people, have a right to ask that this kind of an investigation may be had in order to determine whether the charges are true or not.

These resolutions do not charge corruption upon the part of the citizens of this country, as the Senator from Idaho assumes. I sincerely hope that the investigation made under the resolution will disclose the fact that they are not subject to corruption, because it would be a sorry day for this country if it should ever come when the masses of the people of the country could be influenced and corrupted with money.

There are some things recited in the resolution that every Senator on this floor knows to be true. As the Senator from Idaho says, that does not need any investigation. Members of this body and other public officials have been giving their time day after day to carry on the political campaigns of the different candidates. We know it. A good many of the people of the country do not know it, and they have a perfect right to know if it be true that men sent here as their representatives, men employed in the departments of Government, and paid by them, are using the time for which they are paid by the Government to carry on the campaign of any candidate for President or any other office within the gift of the people.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. NELSON. I want to ask the Senator, in all candor, if those remarks would not apply to some of the Members of this body?

Mr. WORKS. I think they are applied to Members of this body, as the Senator would have known if he had listened to the resolution. I think, if an investigation of this kind is made, that it will be found to be true with respect to Members of this body the same as other public officials.

As I said in the beginning, I am not disposed to discuss the merits of this resolution. I am perfectly willing to take such responsibility as may flow from its introduction. It is for the proper committee and the Senate to determine whether this investigation shall be made or not. I have submitted the resolution in good faith. I think it calls for an investigation, which should be made and made thoroughly, but that, as I have said, is a matter for the Senate to determine.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, personally I have no objection whatever to the resolution introduced by the Senator from California. I, however, do have objection and I wish to protest as a Republican against the argument that was used to bolster up the resolution. We have heard the cry of fraud throughout the country in reference to the presidential primaries from the very beginning, and there is not a man in the Senate of the United States who did not thoroughly understand why that cry of fraud went out months before an election was had in a single State. It is the practice of the incendiary who purposes to destroy by fire to cry fire in some other quarter of the city and thereby divert attention from his own work. We have heard the cry of fraud and what was going to happen and the contests that were going to be initiated from one end of the country to the other. We knew when that cry went forth that there was a purpose, a clear purpose, to create fake contests all over the country, and as those fake contests would necessarily be dismissed there would be seemingly some ground for suspicion and enable the cries of fraud to gain some attention when they were dismissed.

I think it most unjust at this time, in support of a resolution of this character, to declare that the President of the United States received his nomination through fraud and corrupt practices. I do not believe it, Mr. President, myself, and I do not believe that there will be any evidence forthcoming to sustain a charge of that kind.

I am perfectly willing to investigate the question of the amount of money that is necessary in these primary contests. I am willing to investigate and ascertain how many dollars it takes to bring out one-quarter, one-fifth, or one-tenth of the party vote in any one of the States.

There are some justifiable provisions included in the resolution of the Senator from California. I agree with him that a contest has been carried on that has been a disgrace to the American people, and the very system that the Senator supports so strongly and so earnestly has been the system that has invited the kind of personalities against which he complains.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. In just a moment.

Personalities and personal abuse that never would be made before a convention of intelligent men, that never would be made before a legislature in any State in the Union, have been indulged in as fit arguments by those who think they can mislead the people by making charges of a criminal character, charges that would not be made before any convention or any gathering of men organized to make nominations. I agree with the Senator on many of those things contained in his resolution, but I do not agree with him that there has been any fraud or injustice whatever in the matter of dismissing any of those fake contests. There may have been some few contests in which there were close questions, but I believe as a whole the members of the national committee acted honestly and conscientiously in their decisions, and to charge that they have acted dishonestly and corruptly is not only uncalled for but is untrue.

Why, Mr. President, the greatest——

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. One moment. The greatest amount of money that was ever raised in any political campaign was raised in 1896 during the McKinley campaign, and not a dollar of the millions of dollars that were raised was used to buy votes; it was used for literature; it was used to pay the expenses of the speakers; it was used to cover the thousands of expenses that are necessary to carry on a great campaign of education. I do not condemn the using of a great amount of money, whether it comes from the Standard Oil Co., whether it comes from Mr. Perkins in support of his candidate, or whether it comes in support of the present President of the United States, if it is used honestly and fairly for the purpose of getting out literature, for the purpose of presenting facts to the people and not sensational falsehoods. I think the greater force we can have to disseminate true political knowledge over the country the better it will be for the country.

I now yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota may be perfectly right that the presidential primary has resulted in such a campaign as we have just witnessed. If that be the case it has a great deal to answer for, and if it is going to have such an effect in this country I want to know it. I am not so wedded to any kind of machinery for conducting the elections of this country as to insist upon that or any other machinery that is going to result in such consequences.

With respect to the question of the expenditure of money, certainly there may be legitimate expenditures of money in a political campaign whether for President of the United States or anybody else. The object and purpose of the resolution is to ascertain whether the large sums of money alleged to have been used have been used properly or not. To that I should think the Senator from North Dakota would not object.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not object to that, Mr. President.

The closing remarks of the Senator from California in his first address on this subject were not surprising to me. It is a part of what has seemed to me for the last 8 or 10 years to be a consistent policy—a policy of rule or ruin. "If we can not rule the party, if we can not secure the success of our nominee this year, we will turn against the candidate who is nominated." Then they use that as a reason why some other person, representing a different view, should be selected next time. I have heard in a number of the States in the past few years, where we have conducted such elections, the claim made: "We have put up our candidate"—I will say "our progressive candidate"—"for a number of years in the primary; he has not been chosen; so we will elect a Democrat to that position. That will furnish evidence to you, the people of the country, that you had better nominate our candidate." It is simply a hold-up system. "Support our views; support our candidate; or we will destroy the party." That is the proposition in a nutshell that is presented to the Senate of the United States in the argument that has just been made. "If we can not secure the defeat of your candidate in the primary, then, the next step is to defeat him in the election. We will try once more; we will defeat him, if it is possible; if we should not succeed in defeating him, it will be time enough then to consider whether it is necessary to create a third party in order to win."

Mr. President, I believe in fighting out our difficulties within the party itself. I do not believe that the public is so corrupt, I do not believe that the average people who go as delegates to conventions are so corrupt, as the Senator would have us believe. I do not believe that those who support one party are criminals and those who support the other party are saints. I believe that we should and can fight out these questions in our conventions, or fight them out in our primaries if we have the primary system, and then let us as good partisans stand by the party of our choice. If there is a plank in our platform that is not just according to our idea let us try to better fit it to the necessities of the country. If we think our tendency is in the wrong direction, let us work together to guide the party in the right direction. We gain nothing by uniting a number of people who have been defeated in their purposes and attempting to destroy the old organization by creating a new one.

Mr. President, I only rose primarily to dissent most earnestly from this continuous cry of fraud by those who were defeated, and while I might have, with the majority, differed as to some of the contests that were decided I certainly believe that the men who decided them were honest in their convictions in every decision. The majority of the elected delegates favored the renomination of President Taft. As a Republican he is my nominee. Had either of his opponents been nominated I should have supported that nominee.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 331) extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under certain contingencies, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask that House joint resolution No. 331 be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

Mr. WARREN. I think the joint resolution should be read for information, and then referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I will say that the committee have already had the subject under consideration and will probably be prepared to report at once; but I wish that the joint resolution may be read so as to go into the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 331) extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under certain contingencies was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That all appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government, and for the payment of pensions under existing laws, which shall remain unprovided for on the 30th day of June, 1912, be, and they are hereby, continued and made available for and during the month of July, 1912, unless the regular appropriations provided therefor in bills now pending in Congress shall have been previously made for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913; and a sufficient amount is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry on the same: Provided, That no greater amount shall be expended for such operations than as the sum of one-twelfth of the appropriations made for the fiscal year 1912 bears to the whole of the appropriations of said fiscal year: Provided further, That the total expenditures for the whole of the fiscal year 1913 under the several appropriations hereby continued, and under the several appropriation bills now pending, shall not exceed in the aggregate the amounts finally appropriated therefor in the several bills now pending, except in cases where a change is made in the annual, monthly, or per diem compensation or in the numbers of officers, clerks, or other persons authorized to be employed by the several appropriations hereby continued, in which cases the amounts authorized to be expended shall equal one-twelfth of the appropriations for the fiscal year 1912, and eleven-twelfths of the appropriations contained in the several bills now pending when the same shall have been finally passed, unless the salary or compensation of any office shall be increased or diminished without changing the grade or the duties thereof, in which case such salary or compensation shall relate to the entire fiscal year and run from the beginning thereof: And provided further, That the session employees of the Senate and House of Representatives now authorized by law shall be continued upon the rolls until the end of the present session of Congress and paid at the rate per diem or month at which they are now paid; and a sufficient amount is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to pay the same.

This joint resolution shall be construed as authorizing the continuance of the salaries and other expenses under the organization of the Bureau of the Census of the Department of Commerce and Labor as the latter existed June 30, 1912, for the period of time and under the conditions provided herein for all other branches of the public service.

Mr. WARREN subsequently said: The Committee on Appropriations, having considered House joint resolution 331, I report it back favorably without amendment and ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDRESS OF HON. N. C. YOUNG (S. DOC. NO. 865).

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have here a very short address delivered by Hon. N. C. Young, late a member of the Supreme Court of the State of North Dakota, on the subject, "Shall we change our plan of Government?" I consider it a very worthy article, and ask that it be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MANEUVERS OF REGULAR ARMY AND MILITIA.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if any immediate action is being taken in regard to the appropriation for maneuver camps?

Mr. WARREN. We will await the action of the other House upon that matter. Of course we have been unable to act until to-day, but I assume that the other House will take care of it, and that we shall hear from them soon.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Very well.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR GOVERNMENT EXPENSES (H. DOC. NO. 854).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I send herewith the report of the Commission on Economy and Efficiency on "The need for a national budget." The recommendations contained therein are approved by me. I recommend to the Congress the enactment of the legislation necessary to put them into effect.

The subject is one of fundamental importance to the Executive as well as to the Congress. Notwithstanding the magnitude and complexity of the business which is each year conducted by the executive branch and financed by the Congress, and the vital relation which each governmental activity bears to the welfare of the people, there is at present no provision for reporting revenues, expenditures, and estimates for appropriations in such manner that the Executive, before submitting estimates, and each Member of Congress, and the people, after estimates have been submitted, may know what has been done by the Government or what the Government proposes to do.

Briefly stated, the situation is this: Under the Constitution (and subject to its limitations) Congress is made responsible for determining the following questions of policy: What business or work the Government shall undertake; what shall be the organization under the Executive which is charged with executing its policies; what amount of funds and by what means funds shall be provided for each activity or class of work; what shall be the character of expenditures authorized for carrying on each class of work—i. e., how much for expenses, how much for capital outlays, etc.

As a means of definitely locating this responsibility, Congress was given the sole power to levy taxes; to borrow money on the credit of the United States; to authorize money to be drawn from the Treasury. To the President also has been given very definite responsibility. To the end that Congress may effectively discharge its duties the article of the Constitution dealing with legislative power provided that "a regular statement and account of receipts and expenditures of all public moneys shall be published"; and the article dealing with the Executive power requires the President "from time to time to give to the Congress information on the state of the Union and to recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall deem necessary and expedient."

Notwithstanding these specific constitutional requirements there has been relatively little attention given to the working out of an adequate and systematic plan for considering expenditures and estimates for appropriations, for regularly stating these in such form that they may be considered in relation to questions of public policy, and for presenting to Congress for their consideration each year, when requests are made for funds, any definite plan or proposal for which the administration may be held responsible.

Regular committees on expenditure have been established by the Congress for the purpose of obtaining knowledge of conditions through special investigations. During the last century over 100 special congressional investigations have been authorized to obtain information which should have been regularly submitted, and much money as well as much time has been spent by the Congress in its effort to obtain information about matters that should be laid before them as an open book; many statutes have been passed governing the manner in which reports of expenditures shall be made; specific rules have been laid down giving the manner in which estimates shall be submitted to Congress and considered by it. From time to time special investigations have been made by heads of executive departments. During the last century many such investigations have been carried on and much money has been spent in the conduct of these, as well as by Congress, for the purpose of obtaining facts as a basis for intelligent consideration of methods and procedure of doing business with a view to increasing economy and efficiency. From time to time Executive orders have been issued and reorganizations have taken place.

Generally speaking, however, the only conclusions which may be reached from all of this are that—

No regular or systematic means has been provided for the consideration of the detail and concrete problems of the Government.

A well-defined business or work program for the Government has not been evolved.

The reports of expenditures required by law are unsystematic, lack uniformity of classification, and are incapable of being summarized so as to give to Congress, to the President, or to the people a picture of what has been done and of cost in terms either of economy of purchase or efficiency of organization in obtaining results.

The summaries of expenditures required by law to be submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, with estimates, not only do not provide the data necessary to the consideration of questions of policy, but they are not summarized and classified on the same basis as the estimates.

The report on revenues is not in any direct way related to the expenditures, except as the Secretary of the Treasury estimates a surplus or deficiency, and this estimate is based on accounts which do not accurately show expenditures or outstanding liabilities to be met.

Instead of the President being made responsible for estimates of expenditures, the heads of departments and establishments are made the ministerial agents of Congress, the President being called on only to advise Congress how, in his opinion, expenditures may be reduced or revenues may be increased in case estimated expenditures exceed estimated revenues.

The estimates do not raise for consideration questions which should be decided before appropriations are granted, nor does the form in which estimates are required to be presented by the Congress lay the foundation for the consideration of subjects of work to be done, the character of organization best adapted to performing work, the character of expenditures to be made, the best method of financing expenditures.

The present law governing the preparation and submission of estimates, requiring them to be submitted each year in the same form as the year before, was passed without due consideration as to what information should be had before Congress as a basis for action, the result being that the unsystematic and confused method before in use was made continuous.

The rules of the Congress do not provide for the consideration of estimates in such manner that any Member of Congress, any committee, or either House of Congress as a whole may have before it at any one time the information needed for the effective consideration of a program of work done or to be done.

The committee organization is largely the result of historical development rather than of the consideration of present needs.

Inadequate provision is made for getting before each committee to which appropriations are referred all of the data necessary for the consideration of work to be done, organization provided for doing work, character of expenditures, or method of financing.

Following the method at present prescribed, the estimates submitted by each organization unit may have to be split up for consideration by appropriation committees of the Congress and be made the subject of several different bills; in few places are all of the estimates or appropriations asked for by a single organization unit brought together.

The estimates for appropriations requested for a single class of work are similarly divided, no provision being made for considering the amount asked for, the amount appropriated, or the amount spent for a single general class of governmental activity.

Generally speaking, the estimates for expenses (or cost of each definite class of services to be rendered) are not separately shown from estimates for capital outlays (or cost of land, buildings, equipment, and other properties acquired).

While the classification and summaries of estimates do indicate a proposed method of financing, these summaries do not show classes of work or the character of expenditures provided for, and therefore can not lay the foundation for the consideration of methods of financing as a matter of governmental policy as is contemplated under the Constitution.

The appropriations are just as unsystematic and incapable of classification and summary as the estimates; in fact, follow the same general form, making it difficult and in many cases impossible to determine what class of work has been authorized, how much may be spent for each class, or the character of expenditures to be made; nor does any one bill cover the total authorizations for any particular general class of work.

Bills for appropriations (the authorizations to incur liabilities and to spend) are not considered by the committee to which measures for raising revenues and borrowing money are referred, nor are revenues and borrowings considered by committees on appropriations in relation to the funds which will be available.

So long as the method at present prescribed obtains, neither the Congress nor the country can have laid before it a definite understandable program of business or of governmental work to be financed; nor can it have a well-defined, clearly expressed financial program to be followed; nor can either the Congress or the Executive get before the country the proposals of each in such manner as to locate responsibility for plans submitted or for results.

Although the President has the power to install new and improved systems of accounts and to require that information be presented to him each year in such form that he and his Cabinet may intelligently consider proposals or estimates, although the President, under the Constitution, may submit to the Congress each year a definte well-considered budget, with a message calling attention to subjects of immediate importance, to do this without the cooperation of the Congress in the repeal of laws which would be conflicting, and in the enactment of other laws which would place upon the heads of departments duties to be performed that would be in harmony with such procedure would entail a large expenditure of public money in duplication of work.

The purpose of the report which is submitted is to suggest a method whereby the President, as the constitutional head of the administration, may lay before the Congress and the Congress may consider and act on a definite business and financial program; to have the expenditures, appropriations, and estimates so classified and summarized that their broad significance may be readily understood; to provide each Member of Congress, as well as each citizen who is interested, with such data pertaining to each subject of interest that it may be considered in relation to each question of policy which should be gone into before an appropriation for expenditures is made; to have these general summaries supported by such detail information as is necessary to consider the economy and efficiency with which business has been transacted; in short, to suggest a plan whereby the President and Congress may cooperate—the one in laying before the Congress and the country a clearly expressed administrative program to be acted on, the other in laying before the President a definite enactment to be acted on by him. Included in this report are summaries of expenditures for the year 1911, summaries of appropriations for the fiscal year 1912, and summaries of estimates of appropriations for the fiscal year 1913. To these summaries your special attention is invited. Attached is also an appendix containing a digest of laws pertaining to appropriations and allotments, to the preparation of estimates, and to forms of reporting expenditures; also the suggested pro forma draft of budget, which has been prepared by the commission and is submitted for your consideration as a matter bearing very directly on the economy and efficiency with which Government business is carried on.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 27, 1912.

[NOTE.—Report accompanied similar message to the House of Representatives.]

WILLIAM F. M'KIM.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1754) to correct the military record of William F. McKim, which was to amend the title so as to read: "An act for the relief of William F. McKim."

Mr. JONES. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6978) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives and request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. BURNHAM, and Mr. GORE conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

H. R. 4113. An act for the relief of Robert E. Burke;

H. R. 4512. An act for the relief of Mary Beal; and

H. R. 25060. An act for the relief of Joe Cook.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

H. R. 18425. An act to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Simon Nager; and

H. R. 19190. An act for the relief of John F. Risley.

UNEXPENDED BALANCE FOR PARTING AND REFINING BULLION.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Appropriations, I report back favorably without amendment Senate joint resolution No. 121, authorizing the use of certain unexpended balances to defray expenses incident to parting and refining bullion, and I submit a report (No. 899) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the joint resolution for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the unexpended balance of the permanent indefinite appropriation for parting and refining bullion remaining on the books of the Treasury June 30, 1912, may be drawn upon to defray in full the expenses incidental to refining and parting bullion in the mints at Denver and San Francisco and the assay office at New York, including labor, material, wastage, and loss on sale of sweeps, until the regular appropriations for the mint service for the fiscal year 1913 are available, and that the amount expended under this provision shall be deducted from the annual appropriation for this service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the report accompanying the joint resolution may be printed in the RECORD. It is short and carries with it a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in explanation of the necessity for the passage of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire that it be printed in the RECORD without being read?

Mr. WARREN. Without being read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is so ordered, in the absence of objection.

The report submitted this day by Mr. WARREN is as follows:

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted the following report, to accompany Senate joint resolution 121:

The Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 121) authorizing the use of the unexpended balance of the permanent indefinite appropriation for parting and refining bullion remaining on the books of the Treasury June 30, 1912, for said purpose for the fiscal year 1913 until the annual appropriation therefor is available, reports the same to the Senate with the recommendation that it pass without amendment, and in explanation of the action of the committee respectfully submits the following letter from the Secretary of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, June 29, 1912.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

SIR: In connection with the consideration of a joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenses of the Government after June 30, 1912, pending final action upon the regular appropriation bills for the fiscal year 1913, I beg to invite your particular attention to the situation relative to parting and refining operations in the mints and the assay office at New York.

The provision under which all expenditures incident to parting and refining bullion have been met for years past is to be found in the deficiency act of July 7, 1898 (see ch. 571, 30 Stat. L., 657), and reads as follows:

"Chapter 571. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and ninety-eight, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

"PAR. 4a. And refining and parting of bullion shall be carried on at the coinage mints of the United States and at the assay office at New York, and it shall be lawful to apply the moneys arising from charges collected from depositors for these operations, and also the proceeds of sale of by-products (spent acids arising from any surplus bullion recovered in parting and refining processes), pursuant to law, so far as may be necessary, to defraying in full the expenses thereof, including labor, material, wastage, and loss on sale of sweeps.

"But no part of the moneys appropriated for the support of the coinage mints and assay office at New York shall be used to defray the expenses of parting and refining bullion."

The policy of using the proceeds of charges imposed upon bullion to meet the cost of operating the refineries was changed by a provision of the deficiency act of March 4, 1911 (see ch. 240, Public, 480), the repealing clause reading as follows:

"All laws and parts of laws, to the extent that they make a permanent indefinite appropriation for the expenses of parting and refining bullion, are repealed to take effect from and after June 30, 1912; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall, for the fiscal year 1913, and annually thereafter, submit to Congress, in the regular Book of Estimates, detailed estimates for the expenses of this service.

"The unexpended balance, after meeting all obligations, of the permanent indefinite appropriation for parting and refining bullion remaining on the books of the Treasury two years after the close of the fiscal year 1912 shall be covered into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt."

It is a grave question whether a resolution so worded as to extend the 1912 appropriations will have the effect of reviving a statute which is definitely repealed. Estimates for the cost of maintaining this service in the fiscal year 1913 in the Denver and San Francisco mints and the assay office at New York were submitted to Congress, and provisions for the same appear in the bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses. It is highly important that provision be made for continuing these refinery operations at the three institutions without a break. The wages of 90 people are involved. At the New York assay office the larger part of all expenditures have been met from the charges imposed upon bullion and the institution can not be kept open for the transaction of business unless provision is made for meeting these expenses after June 30, 1912.

I therefore suggest that the proposed resolution contain the following specific provision, or one similar that meets your judgment, to cover the situation above pointed out:

"That the unexpended balance of the permanent indefinite appropriation for parting and refining bullion remaining on the books of the Treasury June 30, 1912, may be drawn upon to defray in full the expenses incidental to refining and parting bullion in the mints at Denver and San Francisco and the assay office at New York, including labor, material, wastage, and loss on sale of sweeps, until the regular appropriations for the mint service for the fiscal year 1913 are available, and that the amount expended under this provision shall be deducted from the annual appropriation for this service."

Respectfully,

FRANKLIN MACVEAGH, Secretary.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further concurrent or other resolutions, the morning business is closed.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 20728, being the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 20728) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, before the Secretary proceeds to read the bill, I desire to make a very brief statement.

This bill, as reported from the Senate committee, very largely increases the House appropriations. The increases come from three sources: First, many of the appropriations are appropriations of Indian funds and not of Government funds. Second, many of the increases are simply cases where the House failed to grant the amount estimated for, and the Senate committee has increased the appropriation to the estimate. Third, there are items affecting the conduct of irrigation and other projects where the Indian Office felt that it was wiser to have the larger sum appropriated.

The bill contains a great deal of general legislation, which it seems difficult to get in any other form. I am not so sensitive on that subject as heretofore, in view of the uniform custom at this session of putting much general legislation on the appropriation bills.

I call attention to these matters before the Senate proceeds to consider the bill. Of course it is for the Senate to determine what it will do with them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 2, line 16, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred and fifteen" and insert "three hundred and thirty-five"; in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "$35,000 of which to be immediately available"; and in line 20, after the word "expended," to insert: "Provided, That the unexpended balances of all continuing appropriations heretofore made for survey, allotment, classification, or appraisement work, general or specific, are hereby made available for the purposes enumerated herein. Surveys provided for by appropriations for surveying and allotting Indian reservations shall be made in accordance with the provisions for surveys and resurveys of public lands, including traveling expenses and allowance in lieu of subsistence, to surveyors and clerks detailed as surveyors employed thereunder," so as to make the clause read:

For the survey, resurvey, classification, and appraisement of lands to be allotted in severalty under the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians," and under any other act or acts providing for the survey and allotment of lands in severalty to Indians, including the necessary clerical work incident thereto and to the issuance of all patents in the field and in the Office of Indian Affairs, and to the delivery of trust patents for allotments under said act or any such act or acts; and for the survey and subdivision of Indian reservations and lands to be allotted to Indians under authority of law, $335,000, $35,000 of which to be immediately available, to be repaid proportionately out of any Indian moneys held in trust or otherwise by the United States and available by law for such reimbursable purpose and to remain available until expended: Provided, That the unexpended balances of all continuing appropriations heretofore made for survey, allotment, classification, or appraisement work, general or specific, are hereby made available for the purposes enumerated herein. Surveys provided for by appropriations for surveying and allotting Indian reservations shall be made in accordance with the provisions for surveys and resurveys of public lands, including traveling expenses and allowance in lieu of subsistence, to surveyors and clerks detailed as surveyors employed thereunder.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I would suggest to the Senator, inasmuch as we have commenced on another fiscal year, that the words "to be immediately available" should be stricken from the bill wherever they occur.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, that occurred to me while the joint resolution we have passed was being read. It strikes me that while the joint resolution answers the purpose for the present, some provision must be made in all these appropriation bills to meet that proposition. In these bills there are certain appropriations with reference to a fixed day. That day has already passed; yet the joint resolution of the two Houses does not cover an appropriation made under those circumstances. I thought that, if necessary, when we get through with all of them, the Committee on Appropriations can meet that difficulty by some general provision.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall not insist upon my suggestion, Mr. President. It does no harm to leave in the clause; but it seems to me it is unnecessary, for the reason that when the bill becomes a law all these appropriations will be immediately available.

Mr. CLAPP. Will they?

Mr. GALLINGER. Absolutely.

Mr. WARREN. The 1st of July will have passed before the bill becomes a law, but it will do no harm to leave in the language.

Mr. CLAPP. Some of them would be immediately available and some, in the very nature of things, would not be.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall not insist upon it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 3, line 10, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three hundred" and insert "three hundred and forty-five," so as to read:

For the construction, repair, and maintenance of ditches, reservoirs, and dams, purchase and use of irrigation tools and appliances, water rights, ditches, lands necessary for canals, pipe lines, and reservoirs for Indian reservations and allotments, and for drainage and protection of irrigable lands from damage by floods, $345,000, to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for the construction, repair, and maintenance of ditches, reservoirs, and dams, etc.; on page 4, line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "fifty-five," so as to make the clause read:

For traveling expenses of two inspectors of irrigation, at $3 per diem when actually employed on duty in the field, exclusive of transportation and sleeping-car fare, in lieu of all other expenses authorized by law, and for incidental expenses of negotiation, inspection, and investigation, including telegraphing and expense of going to and from the seat of government and while remaining there under orders, $4,200; in all, $355,700: Provided also, That not to exceed seven superintendents of irrigation, who shall be skilled irrigation engineers, may be employed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in line 17, after the word "employed," to insert:

Provided also, That there shall be covered into each fund, from whatsoever source derived, for construction or maintenance and operation of any irrigation project or system within the jurisdiction of the Indian Service or preliminary surveys and investigations for determining the feasibility or cost of new projects in the Indian Service, the proceeds of the sales of material utilized for temporary work and structures, as well as of the sales of any other property which had been purchased from such fund, and also any moneys refunded in connection with operations necessary for and incidental to such work; and for lands under any such project the Secretary of the Interior may fix annual maintenance charges, which shall be paid as he may direct, such charges, when collected, not to be covered into the Treasury but to be immediately available for use for the maintenance and operation of the project or system for which collected.

Mr. CURTIS. I make the point of order against that amendment. I think the acting chairman will concede that it is general legislation, in violation of Rule XVI.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will be glad if the acting chairman of the committee will indicate whether or not there is an issue upon that point.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I do not see how there can be any issue. The Senator makes the point of order. It is a provision that the Indian Office is very anxious to have. That is the only thing I can urge in its behalf.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will sustain the point of order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest that we go on to-day on these matters as in Committee of the Whole, and when we get into the Senate, if any Senator wishes to offer an amendment to strike out anything that has been agreed to—I do not know that such will be the case—he can do so. I do not suppose the Senator desires to have the bill passed to-day.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course I should like to have the bill passed to-day if it can be passed without pressing the matter against the convenience of Senators. It is an appropriation bill, and we want to get the appropriation bills out of the way.

Mr. OVERMAN. I realize that fact, but I think probably the Senator can not get it passed to-day. I simply make the suggestion so that we may reserve any amendments that any Senator desires to reserve. I have no amendments to offer myself, and no fight to make on the bill. But there are only a few Democratic Senators here, and there may be some who will desire to have the course I suggest taken.

Mr. CLAPP. There is no objection to agreeing to that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator, Mr. President, if he objects to a point of order being made and ruled upon by the Chair?

Mr. OVERMAN. Not at all. I only want, when the bill gets into the Senate, to reserve the right to submit any amendment that any Senator wants to submit. I am doing it only as a matter of caution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no fight to make on the bill myself, and no amendments to offer.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 5, line 10, after the word "Indians," to insert "including the illegal introduction of intoxicating liquors into the State of Oklahoma," so as to make the clause read:

For the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians, including the illegal introduction of intoxicating liquors into the State of Oklahoma, $75,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, in view of the decision of the Supreme Court that the law does apply to Oklahoma, I think that amendment is unnecessary, and I will ask that the Senate disagree to it.

Mr. CLAPP. I think so, too.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CURTIS. That we disagree to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is properly put in the affirmative, and those who wish to disagree will vote against the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I have talked with some members of the committee and I wish to offer an amendment at this point. In the conduct of this matter of suppressing the traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians it has been found that a strict interpretation of the law would prohibit the introduction of wines into Indian country to be used for sacramental purposes. The undesirability of such a restriction is so manifest that I am going, at this time and in connection with this item, to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 12, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter it shall not be unlawful to introduce and use wines solely for sacramental purposes, under church authority, at any place within the Indian country or any Indian reservation, including the Pueblo Reservations in New Mexico.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question for information. Can it be possible that the Indians may not make wine from the grapes grown in that part of the country? They grow plenty of grapes there.

Mr. CLAPP. There are some sections of the country where grapes could be grown and homemade wine made for sacramental purposes. There are other sections of the country where it is very doubtful whether that could be done. A strict construction of the liquor law, at least the construction placed upon it by the authorities, prohibits the having of wine within the Indian country even for sacramental purposes, and to set the matter at rest and avoid any further question in regard to it I have offered this amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not rise to object to the amendment, but my attention was attracted by the suggestion that any legislation is necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will suspend for one moment. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 20182) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask if the Senator from Idaho desires to speak upon the unfinished business. If not, I shall ask unanimous consent that it be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. HEYBURN. I had intended at this time to make some remarks, but in view of the fact that the Indian appropriation bill is before the Senate I will defer any remarks. Of course it is not to be laid aside for the day, but only to be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. SMOOT. Temporarily. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do want to get at an intelligent idea of this matter. Can it be possible that one in authority has held that Indians may not make wine out of the grapes at their door? Everyone who knows this country knows that grapes are one of the plentiful fruits, and that it should require legislation in order that they might have wine for church purposes seems to me to imply that they may not make wine out of their own grapes.

Mr. CLAPP. I will ask the Senator if it is his understanding that under the law of this country an Indian within the prohibited classes has the right to manufacture liquor on a reservation?

Mr. HEYBURN. I should dislike to think that we had ever been so unwise in legislation as to make it impossible for Indians to make wine of their own grapes for such a purpose. If we have, then it is another of the curiosities that should be taken into consideration in legislation.

I was impelled to make the suggestion because of the fact that if any person should be permitted to do it they should be permitted to make out of their production whatever a white man might make out of his. Those Indians there are probably quite up to the standard of average American citizenship.

Mr. CLAPP. That is all true, but the fact remains that those in authority maintain that wine for sacramental purposes comes within the general provision of the statute.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then my criticism would be shifted to those in authority.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in line 12, after the words "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the powers conferred by section 788 of the Revised Statutes upon marshals and their deputies are hereby conferred upon the chief special officer for the suppression of the liquor traffic among Indians and duly authorized officers working under his supervision whose appointments are made or affirmed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator that as he has already inserted a proviso, that this proviso should read "Provided also," and I would further suggest that it be made one paragraph instead of two.

Mr. CLAPP. That can be done now or in the final preparation of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. The clerks can make it a single paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 13, after the word "Provided," insert "also."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Let it appear in the RECORD that the part beginning in line 9 down to the end of line 19 shall be treated as one paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be done.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 24, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty" and insert "two hundred and fifty," so as to make the clause read:

To relieve distress among Indians and to provide for their care and for the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis, trachoma, smallpox, and other contagious and infectious diseases, including the purchase of vaccine and expense of vaccination, $250,000.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to know something of the necessity for making so radical a change as to strike out $60,000 and insert $250,000 for purchase of vaccine and expense of vaccination.

Mr. CURTIS. It was my purpose to oppose this amendment, and if the Senator will——

Mr. HEYBURN. I will leave it to the Senator, who is much more familiar with the subject; but I was naturally put upon inquiry by the vast raise in the appropriation.

Mr. CURTIS. I dislike very much to oppose an amendment of this kind, but it seems to me that the report of the commissioner justifies me in taking that course. I hope the Senate will disagree to the amendment.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs estimated for only $75,000. The House gave them only $60,000. Last year there was appropriated for this purpose $60,000, and only $53,000 of it was used. Twenty thousand dollars of that was used in the building of a hospital and only $10,000 was used for medicine; $1,000 was used to buy material for taking photographs, and all the balance was paid in salaries. The year before they had $40,000 and used only $29,000.

It seems to me that there is no justification for so large an increase in view of what has been expended and in view of the further fact that there are now 100 regular physicians, 64 contract physicians, 54 matrons, and 88 field matrons to look after matters of this kind and attend the Indians who need care and attention.

I hope the amendment will be voted down, and then I should like to have the Senate give the commissioner what he asked, $75,000.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to inquire if the Senator has information as to how much of this sum is expended for physicians and how much for vaccine matter.

Mr. CURTIS. Less than $10,000 was paid out for medicines of all kinds.

Mr. HEYBURN. That would include vaccine matter?

Mr. CURTIS. I will read the items that were paid out last year:

Relieving distress among destitute Indians	$3,000
Purchase of vaccine and antitoxin and the vaccination of Indians	3,000
Employment of special physicians and purchase of medicines	3,000
Equipment and maintenance of sanatoria in the North and Northwest	20,000
3 physicians at large, at $1,400 per annum each	4,200
Expenses of 3 physicians, at $1,200 each	3,600
1 nurse, field service	1,000
Expenses of nurse, field service	1,200
Traveling expenses and subsistence of physician detailed to Trachoma Hospital at Phoenix	1,200
1 nurse, field service	720
Expenses of nurse, field service	1,200
2 contract physicians, 1 at $480 and 1 at $720	1,200
2 nurses, at $720	1,440
2 assistant nurses, at $300	600
Incidental expenses, such as extra drugs, supplies, etc., in open market	500
1 nurse	720
1 cook	600
Incidental expenses at tuberculosis sanatorium, such as fresh fruit, extra food, and supplies in open market	500
Salary	2,200
Traveling and incidental expenses	2,095
Transportation for box of books and instruments	150
Motion picture accessories, etc	204

Mr. HEYBURN. What is that item?

Mr. CURTIS (reading)—

Motion-picture accessories, chemicals, 2 boxes Ozone, 8 cans lime, and 100 barrels sulphuric ether	$204.00
6 cases photographic plates	100.00
3 cases lantern slides	50.00
6 gross developing paper	50.00
Photographic accessories, chemicals	100.00
5,000 feet positive film	212.50
7,000 feet negative film	262.50

Making a total of $53,104 expended last year.

Mr. HEYBURN. There is nothing in the report showing extraordinary conditions under which there should be an increase?

Mr. CURTIS. Nothing at all.

Mr. HEYBURN. Can the chairman of the committee advise us as to why the increase was made?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, this item was increased from the amount allowed by the House over the estimate of the bureau on the request of the Indian Office. I will read a statement which appears in the report and which is brief:

The records of the Indian Bureau show that a large per cent of the Indians are afflicted with tuberculosis as well as trachoma. The conditions of health among the Indians as has been revealed by a careful study of conditions, especially as relates to trachoma, is very startling, indeed, as it is shown by carefully prepared statistics that anywhere from 15 to 80 per cent of the Indians in different parts of the country are suffering from trachoma, and if this terrible disease is not checked a large number of Indians will eventually become totally blind.

Then here comes another feature of it:

It should be remembered that this disease not only endangers the sight of a large per cent of the Indians, but it endangers the health of millions of white people living in the immediate vicinity of the Indian reservations and who come in contact with the Indians.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not these Indians are living in their homes—on their farms. They are not in a reservation?

Mr. CLAPP. Some are on reservations; some are on farms and in their homes. There is an indiscriminate condition of the Indian situation with reference to residence from those who are still practically blanket Indians to those who now own and cultivate farms.

Mr. HEYBURN. Are the blanket Indians remaining within the purview of this bill?

Mr. CLAPP. There are yet a great many Indians who might properly be called blanket Indians.

Mr. HEYBURN. These are in Oklahoma.

Mr. CLAPP. No; this would apply to the whole country.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was just looking at the end to see whether it is so extensive.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator is correct, then the committee was laboring under a very serious misapprehension.

Mr. HEYBURN. The clause beginning in line 9 reads:

For the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians, including the illegal introduction of intoxicating liquors into the State of Oklahoma, $75,000.

I find no qualifying provision between that language and the language under consideration. I suppose the committee intended this to be of general application to all Indians.

Mr. CURTIS. A general provision, to apply to all Indians throughout the country.

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly. That criticism would apply to the provision for the day Indian schools.

Mr. HEYBURN. I had that in mind. I have it before me. I merely wanted information in regard to it. I have no sympathy with the vaccination proposition whatever, and to see a sum, including that kind of services, raised nearly $200,000 rather provoked inquiry.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course, vaccination is a very small item. It is included with the others. I will say that there was a time when smallpox was a very destructive disease, but to-day tuberculosis and trachoma are the two diseases that menace the Indians.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am going to ask a question that will reveal ignorance on my part, although I think probably I understand it. This bill does not apply to Indians in Alaska, I assume.

Mr. CLAPP. No; it does not, except in one or two schools that are specially mentioned.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have in mind a very eloquent and pathetic appeal of the Bishop of Alaska for Indians in that Territory, or whatever we may call it, and if I get an opportunity I should like very much to vote for a liberal appropriation to relieve the suffering of the people there. But I assume that this is not of general application.

Mr. CLAPP. Only where it is specified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH of Georgia in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the vote is taken I will ask the Senator from Kansas if I understood him correctly to say that the estimate of the department was $75,000?

Mr. CURTIS. Seventy-five thousand dollars.

Mr. GALLINGER. The House reduced it to $60,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Because last year only $53,000 was expended, and the year before I think $29,000 was expended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall support a motion of the committee to insert $75,000 in lieu of $60,000.

Mr. CLAPP. I shall move now, on behalf of the committee, to insert $75,000 in lieu of $60,000, if there be no objection to that.

Mr. CURTIS. I think that ought to be done.

Mr. CLAPP. The motion now is to amend, on line 24, by striking out "sixty" before "thousand" and inserting "seventy-five" in lieu thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 24, after the word "vaccination," strike out "sixty" and insert "seventy-five," so as to read "seventy-five thousand dollars."

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that the amendment proposing to appropriate $250,000 has been stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was disagreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I propose to insert $75,000 in lieu of $60,000, conforming to the estimates of the Indian Office.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if, in his opinion, $75,000 is sufficient for the purposes enumerated?

Mr. CLAPP. Personally, I do not feel that it is. I think the increase, especially of trachoma among the Indians during the last two or three years, warrants us in making a larger appropriation, and I not only moved the amendment at the request of the office but I very cheerfully supported it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think we ought to stop a moment to consider this matter before we hurriedly strike out a provision that has been adopted by the committee after a very full hearing. We are appropriating, Mr. President, some $10,000,000, I think, in the bill for the benefit of the Indians of the country. Large sums are being expended for instruction. I do not know what particular good we will obtain by instructing and educating Indians this year, when what knowledge they may have obtained could not be exercised, as they would be in the grave. I can not see the necessity of spending millions of dollars for the comfort of the Indians in certain lines while we neglect to appropriate a few thousand dollars necessary for the purpose of saving lives. It seems to me that the life of the Indian is about the first thing to take into consideration; that first we ought to look after their health. An Indian diseased with tuberculosis or smallpox is not going to be a very useful Indian, and the money expended will not be very beneficially expended in his behalf if we do not first adopt some means to stop the spread of this fatal disease among the Indians.

The evidence, as I now remember, that was taken before the committee showed that 30, 40, 60, or 70 per cent of the Indians in some sections were affected by tuberculosis. If we want to settle the Indian question in a very short time, we might withdraw all aid in this direction, and in a very few years it would not be necessary for us to pay out expenses for schools, and so forth.

I again appeal to the Senate to appropriate what ought to be appropriated to eradicate the disease. The commissioner says that it is necessary. Those who were present and testified as to the condition of the Indians in the several sections of the country showed, to my mind, most conclusively that $250,000 ought to be expended for their protection and in the attempt to wipe out this dread disease. Therefore, Mr. President, I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota by inserting $150,000 in lieu of $75,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from North Dakota that sufficient appropriation should be made to take care of the health of the Indians, but the Senator will remember that a gentleman who appeared before the committee stated that in one case where the Indians had been under the care of the Government they had been bothered with trachoma, and after they were left alone and went to themselves trachoma had entirely disappeared. There was no evidence given before the committee that justified such a large appropriation or such a large increase as was made by the committee. There was nothing in the previous expenditures of the department to show that that amount of money was necessary.

I agree with the Senator from North Dakota that every precaution should be taken. So far as I am concerned, I shall vote for his amendment making the amount $150,000. If any facts had been given to the committee, if any cases had been cited, or if the report had shown that the money was expended for medicine or something for the use of the Indians instead of for photographs and things of that kind, and only $10,000 of it for medicine, I would have voted for the appropriation of $250,000.

I believe that before the department get at the hands of Congress large sums they should give an itemized statement to the Senate or to the House showing what they need the appropriation for. I shall support the amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. I agree with the Senator that probably there may have been some wastefulness in previous appropriations, but this paragraph is clear in reference to the purpose for which the money is to be used. If the department will use the money for the purposes indicated and not for films for kodaks, I have no doubt but that a great deal of benefit can be obtained. I believe that the whole amount should have been appropriated and most of it used, not so much for trachoma and for minor diseases as for the eradication of tuberculosis. I am glad that the Senator agrees at least that we should have $150,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to ask the Senator from North Dakota if the hearings to which he alludes have been printed?

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not certain.

Mr. CLAPP. They are in print.

Mr. McCUMBER. We had a witness before us, a special examiner, who had been out in Montana and Washington, and his evidence was very strong on the subject.

Mr. GALLINGER. The proposition of the committee, Mr. President, was to increase the appropriation $163,000, which would necessarily have gone to physicians and for medicines. I think it is an extravagant suggestion. Trachoma undoubtedly exists among those people. It will not require a great deal of either medical treatment or medicine to care for that disease if it is properly handled. So far as tuberculosis is concerned, these Indians have to-day at their own command, without physicians and without medicine, all that advanced medical science says can do them any good; they are out in the open. The system now is to establish open-air camps for tuberculosis patients, and the physician who would use medicine to any very considerable extent in the treatment of that disease at the present time would be laughed at by the advanced members of the profession.

So, I see no reason why in this case a very large amount of money should be appropriated for physicians and medicines for these two particular diseases, and yet that is the proposition involved in this amendment. If the Senators who know more about the matter than I do think that the amount ought to be increased to $150,000, I certainly would not oppose it, although it occurs to me that as $62,000 was used last year and some of it was used for moving-picture films and all sorts of things that may have amused those people, $75,000 will be adequate for this year. But at best the matter is going to conference and it will be adjusted there. In that view, while I think it is not a necessary increase, I shall not vote against it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I hope that the motion to make the amount $150,000 will prevail. The ills of the Indians are not confined entirely to the diseases named here. The employment of physicians is very largely used for other diseases.

Mr. GALLINGER. One suggestion made by the Senator from North Dakota attracted my attention. It is that the testimony showed that in many instances 75 per cent——

Mr. McCUMBER. I would not say 75 per cent. I suggest in some cases I think 70 per cent.

Mr. GALLINGER. That as high as 70 per cent were afflicted with tuberculosis. The Senator has in his own State a good many Indians, and we are making appropriations for the Indians in the State of North Dakota. I will ask the Senator if he has discovered any such percentage among the Indians in North Dakota as that even 50 per cent or 40 per cent of them are suffering from tuberculosis.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know the exact per cent. I know that the percentage is very great, even among those in North Dakota. It is demonstrated, I think, that the disease is to some extent, at least, infectious, and while the Senator's remedy may be the proper remedy for the treatment of tuberculosis, and if it could be cured in a single summer by keeping the Indians out of doors, that might be quite a proper remedy, and would require but little expenditure; these Indians, especially in the northern regions, can hardly camp out when the thermometer registers 30 or 40 or 50 below zero. They are compelled to live in houses during at least six or seven months of the year, and possibly eight months in some sections of the country. Their houses are not sanitary. They need more or less instruction in the matter of their own treatment of themselves, and they need constant assistance. The Indian does not follow advice very readily. He is somewhat indigent and somewhat careless as to his personal habits. The buildings in which they live are often very insanitary and conducive to increasing the extent of tuberculosis. So there is something besides medicine that must be considered in the matter of treatment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will not raise any issue on this point. I do not set myself up as an authority at all, but I have sometimes thought that we were pampering the Indian a little too much; that it is about time, after the centuries have come and gone, for the Indian to be taught some degree, at least, of self-reliance and some degree of self-support. But that probably is not the popular idea, and I have no disposition to deny to these poor people any governmental aid that they can reasonably ask, except I do feel that if this appropriation is to be largely used for physicians and medicines, while it is a good thing for the profession, with which I greatly sympathize, it is rather a profligate expense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 6, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to investigate, audit, and adjust, under such terms, conditions, and regulations as he may prescribe, the claims of licensed traders and other bona fide claimants who have claims against individual Indians under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior, $75,000: Provided, That $10,000 of this amount may be used for clerk hire in the Indian Bureau.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make the point of order against that amendment on two grounds: First, the appropriation was not estimated for; and, second, it is general legislation and in violation of Rule XVI.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, the committee will have to accept as sound the objection made by the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 6, line 12, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "five," and in the same line, before the word "thousand," to strike out "and fifty," so as to read:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools, not otherwise provided for, and for other educational and industrial purposes in connection therewith, $1,500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four hundred and twenty-five" and insert "six hundred and fifty," so as to make the clause read:

For construction, lease, purchase, repairs, and improvements of school and agency buildings, and for sewerage, water supply, and lighting plants, and for purchase of school sites, $650,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 22, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to expend $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in the prevention and control of forest fires on Indian reservations during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, all sums expended hereunder to be reimbursed from the tribal funds of the Indians on the reservations where the sums are expended.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make the point of order against that amendment that it is general legislation.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Kansas will not press the point of order. There is a great deal of destruction of timber belonging to these Indians. This is a reimbursable appropriation. I doubt very much whether technically it is subject to a point of order. The Senate held some years ago that even in the case of a claim against an Indian tribe the item was not subject to a point of order. I certainly hope the point will not be pressed.

Mr. CURTIS. Does the Senator from Minnesota say that this provision is wholly for the protection of timber from fire?

Mr. CLAPP. It reads:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to expend $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in the prevention and control of forest fires on Indian reservations during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, all sums expended hereunder to be reimbursed from the tribal funds of the Indians on the reservations where the sums are expended.

Mr. CURTIS. I will withdraw the point of order on that amendment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 9, after line 4, to insert:

There is hereby appropriated the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, for the purpose of encouraging industry among Indians and to aid them to engage in the culture of fruits, grains, and other crops. The said sum may be used for the purchase of animals, machinery, tools, implements, and other equipment necessary to enable Indians to become self-supporting: Provided, That the sum hereby appropriated shall be expended subject to the conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925, and all repayments to this fund made on or before June 30, 1924, are hereby appropriated for the same purpose as the original fund, and the entire fund, including such repayments, shall remain available until June 30, 1924; and all repayments to the fund hereby created which shall be made subsequent to June 30, 1924, shall be covered into the Treasury and shall not be withdrawn or applied except in consequence of a subsequent appropriation made by law: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall submit to Congress annually on the first Monday in December a detailed report of the use of this fund.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make the point of order against that amendment on two grounds: First, the amount named was not estimated for; and, second, the amendment proposes general legislation, in violation of Rule XVI.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, the committee will have to concede the correctness of the point of order, though I regret it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 10, line 20, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "five," and in line 21, after the word "rent," to insert: "Provided, That hereafter the Board of Indian Commissioners is authorized to employ a secretary, not a member of said board, and pay his salary out of the appropriation herein made or which shall hereafter be made for said board: Provided further, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby directed to pay the salary of H. C. Phillips for services heretofore rendered said board as secretary out of the appropriation provided for the expenses of said Board of Indian Commissioners in the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912," so as to make the clause read:

For expenses of the Board of Indian Commissioners, $5,000, including not to exceed $300 for office rent: Provided, That hereafter the Board of Indian Commissioners is authorized to employ a secretary, not a member of said board, and pay his salary out of the appropriation herein made or which shall hereafter be made for said board: Provided further, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby directed to pay the salary of H. C. Phillips for services heretofore rendered said board as secretary out of the appropriation provided for the expenses of said Board of Indian Commissioners in the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Minnesota if it is possible that the money shall be paid out of the appropriation of the last fiscal year?

Mr. CLAPP. I suppose it was upon the theory that there was money left over.

Mr. GALLINGER. At the end of the fiscal year, it strikes me, the money must be turned back into the Treasury, and that this would not be approved. We would have to reappropriate it.

Mr. CLAPP. That is true, but does not this amount to a reappropriation? That was the design.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am afraid not. I think the Senator had better let that amendment be passed over for the present, and look into it.

Mr. WARREN. I think, if that is the idea, it will have to be expressed as a reappropriation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Unquestionably so. Let it go over.

Mr. CLAPP. Let the amendment be passed over. I will change the language.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 11, line 24, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eighty-five" and insert "one hundred and twenty-five," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of special agents at $2,000 per annum; for traveling and incidental expenses of such special agents, including sleeping-car fare, and a per diem of $3 in lieu of subsistence when actually employed on duty in the field or ordered to the seat of government; for transportation and incidental expenses of officers and clerks of the Office of Indian Affairs when traveling on official duty; for pay of employees not otherwise provided for; and for other necessary expenses of the Indian Service for which no other appropriation is available, $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 12, to insert:

Provided, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may expend not to exceed $1,000 of this appropriation in purchasing law books for official use in the Indian Bureau.

Mr. CURTIS. I want to ask the acting chairman of the committee why that amount of law books provided for can not be purchased out of the contingent fund of the Interior Department?

Mr. CLAPP. The Indian Commissioner advised the committee that the comptroller declined or objected—I do not know that he put it quite so strong as refused—at least he objected to paying this item out of the contingent fund. That was the reason why the amendment was put in the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would suggest that the proviso should become a part of the text of the bill on the preceding page, and not be made a separate paragraph. The Senator, if he examines it, will see the point of that suggestion.

Mr. CLAPP. I think that ought to be done, Mr. President. Let the proper record be made for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 12, after line 4, to insert:

For continuing the work of classifying and indexing the files of the Indian Office and preparing historical data from records therein, including the pay of employees, $5,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 8, to insert:

For the purpose of conducting hearings and taking evidence to determine the heirs of deceased Indian allottees, pursuant to the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., 855 to 866), and the regulations thereunder prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, $100,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I wish the chairman of the committee would explain the necessity for that item, if he can.

Mr. CLAPP. Just a moment before I take the matter up. Acting on the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] I think the bill will read much better when concluded if the words "to be immediately available" are eliminated in all cases where they occur.

Mr. GALLINGER. That ought to be done.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire it understood that it shall be done.

Mr. WARREN. Why not ask that the Secretary may do that in this place the same as in the others?

Mr. CLAPP. It amounts to the same thing.

Mr. GALLINGER. That should be done in all cases.

Mr. WARREN. In all cases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. CLAPP. Now, Mr. President, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], I will say that the Indian Office asks for this upon the ground that—

The regular administrative work of the various Indian agencies taxes the efforts of those officials to the limit. There have been about 200,000 allotments to Indians on 52 reservations, of which number it is believed that about 40,000 allottees have died leaving undetermined heirs. In order to clear up the tangled condition of the estates of deceased Indians so that the inherited lands may be disposed of to white settlers and so that the money may be available to provide the Indian heirs with funds with which to begin the farming of their own allotments and the building of sanitary homes, it is desirable that this item should be retained in the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to the amendment. I merely wanted to get into the RECORD the information which the Senator from Minnesota has furnished.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 12, after line 15, to insert:

That so much of the provision of the Indian appropriation act of June 7, 1897 (30 Stat. L., pp. 62–90), as limits the amount that may be paid for salaries or compensation to employees regularly employed at any one agency to $10,000 and at a consolidated agency to $15,000 is hereby amended by increasing the amounts to $20,000 and $25,000, respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Arizona and New Mexico," on page 13, line 15, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eight" and insert "eleven"; and in line 16, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-seven" and insert "thirty," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 700 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Phoenix, Ariz., and for pay of superintendent, $119,400; for general repairs and improvements, $11,000; in all, $130,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 20, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "five"; and in line 21, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-one" and insert "twenty-three," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 100 pupils at the Indian school at Truxton Canyon, Ariz., and for pay of superintendent, $18,200; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; in all, $23,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 3, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That the proportion of the cost of the irrigation project on the Gila River Indian Reservation heretofore and herein authorized to be paid from the public funds shall be repaid into the Treasury of the United States as and when funds may be available therefor: Provided further, That in the event any allottee shall receive a patent in fee to an allotment of land irrigated under this project before the United States shall have been wholly reimbursed as herein provided, then the proportionate cost of the project, to be apportioned equitably by the Secretary of the Interior, shall become a first lien on such allotment, and the fact of such lien shall be recited on the face of each patent in fee issued and the amount of the lien set forth therein, which said lien, however, shall not be enforced so long as the original allottee or his heirs shall own the allotment; and the receipt of the Secretary of the Interior, or of the officer, agent, or employee duly authorized by him for that purpose, for the payment of the amount assessed against any allotment as herein provided shall, when duly recorded by the recorder of deeds in the county wherein the land is located, operate as a satisfaction of such lien.

So as to read:

For maintenance, including purchase of electricity for irrigation wells already completed, and the completion of the lateral irrigating ditches thereunder in connection with the irrigation of the lands of the Pima Indians in the vicinity of Sacaton, in the Gila River Indian Reservation, $15,000: Provided, That the proportion of the cost of the irrigation project on the Gila River Indian Reservation heretofore and herein authorized to be paid from the public funds shall be repaid into the Treasury of the United States as and when funds may be available therefor: Provided further, That in the event any allottee shall receive a patent in fee to an allotment of land irrigated under this project before the United States shall have been wholly reimbursed as herein provided, then the proportionate cost of the project, to be apportioned equitably by the Secretary of the Interior, shall become a first lien on such allotment, and the fact of such lien shall be recited on the face of each patent in fee issued and the amount of the lien set forth therein, which said lien, however, shall not be enforced so long as the original allottee or his heirs shall own the allotment; and the receipt of the Secretary of the Interior, or of the officer, agent, or employee duly authorized by him for that purpose, for the payment of the amount assessed against any allotment as herein provided shall, when duly recorded by the recorder of deeds in the county wherein the land is located, operate as a satisfaction of such lien.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether or not it is proposed in allotting irrigated lands to the Indians to make the cost of construction a lien upon the lands that may be foreclosed.

Mr. CLAPP. Not so long as they retain the land, but in case they dispose of the land, then it is a lien.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then it is a charge against the value of their lands.

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. And a limitation on the right of sale.

Mr. CLAPP. Undoubtedly; it does amount, in effect, to a certain limitation.

Mr. HEYBURN. That would seem to me to be a very harsh way of dealing with the Indians. You take their lands, irrigate them, and say to them—and they are citizens of the United States—"you will stay right here, and if you sell these lands or do anything to better your condition in life, then we will foreclose to the extent of the cost of putting water on them." The Indian would rather have the land without the water than to have it subject to so harsh a condition as that. No white man would submit to it for a moment.

I do not know where the idea originated, but, of course, I assume that it did not originate with the acting chairman of the committee. It is probable that a departmental clerk somewhere conceived the idea of making the burden of these Indians more onerous than it is. I would rather see the whole amendment go out of the bill than to see so harsh a burden as that placed upon the Indians. Two years ago and four years ago we had that same question here of seizing a man's land and, as Lord Eldon said, "improving him out of his title." That is what it amounts to. The Indian does not depend upon the market; he depends upon his own necessities for the value of the land, while the white man depends upon the market where he can sell the proceeds of the land.

I do not like to raise a point of order against these matters, but I think, if the Senator in charge of the bill will allow the amendment to go over and give it a little more thought, he will find some way of eliminating that harsh feature from it.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, this plan has been adopted quite generally with reference to Indian reservations, but it has not yet been applied to the Pima Reservation.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it has not always been successfully adopted. In the case of the California Indians, some six years ago now, the Senate refused to accede to any such plan. Again, two years ago, when the question was before the Senate, the Senate again refused to recognize it. Now it is brought up again. If they are not doing one thing, they are doing another; if they are not cutting the units down so that the Indian can not possibly sustain himself and those dependent upon him, then they are putting a burden upon the Indian in the way of payment, and they say now, "So long as you and your family and your descendants live here we will not foreclose, but it will be a charge against you and a burden on your property, and if you undertake to exercise the right that ought to belong to you, if you are citizens of the United States, then we will foreclose." We have to keep our eyes on the departments; we have to keep our eyes on that department particularly.

Mr. CLAPP. I suggest that the matter go over for the present.

Mr. HEYBURN. A word before it goes over. These are Indians with whom we have treaty relations. We have entirely lost sight of those relations, and we seem to have reached a point where we think we can be forgetful of the relations that ordinarily exist and take their lands and, as I have said, improve them out of their title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from Minnesota asks that the amendment be passed over.

Mr. CLAPP. I suggest that it go over for the present.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. CLAPP. I understand the Senator from Arizona desires to say a word on the matter before it is passed over.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, just a word. I appreciate what the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] has just said. I have the honor to be a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I desire at this time publicly to make expression of my appreciation as a Senator of the faithfulness of that committee in the performance of its duty. That committee labored for nearly three months on this bill. This item was carefully considered, and the reason—if I remember aright—why it was inserted in this way was the committee felt that it would be for the benefit of the Indian. If he had land at that particular place allotted to him and he were permitted to alienate it, speculators could come along and buy his land, he would possibly squander the money received for the sale of the land and again soon become a charge upon the Government, whereas if allowed to retain the title and cultivate his land, the Government for all practical purposes has furnished him with an irrigation project without any charge to him——

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, of course Indians differ in different sections. Now, we are not under the necessity of considering——

Mr. ASHURST. Just permit me a moment, and I will close. I wish, of course, this money could be appropriated without the reimbursement feature. I now yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. We are not under the necessity of considering the Indian as incompetent to take care of his money. A tribe of Indians in the adjoining county to that in which I live is, if not the first, the second wealthiest organization or body of citizens of the United States. They know how to keep their money in bank; they know how to invest it; and they know how to do business with it probably as well as any body of white men.

Mr. ASHURST. That may be true as to some tribes of Indians.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is true generally of our northern Indians.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in the item of appropriation for the maintenance of the Gila Indian Reservation, on page 15, line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty-five," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to convene a board of not less than three engineers of the Army of wide reputation and large experience to make the necessary examinations, borings, and surveys for the purpose of determining the reasonability and practicability of constructing a dam and reservoir at or in the vicinity of the Box Canyon, on the San Carlos Indian Reservation, known as the site of the proposed San Carlos reservoir on the Gila River, Ariz., and the necessary irrigation works in connection therewith to provide for the irrigation of Indian, private, and public lands in the Gila River Valley. Said board of engineers to submit to Congress the results of their examinations and surveys, together with an estimate of cost, with their recommendations thereon at the earliest practicable date. The sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of conducting said investigations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 15, to strike out:

For the development of a water supply for domestic and stock purposes and for irrigation for nomadic Papago Indians in Pima County, Ariz., to be immediately available, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 19, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the possibility of enlarging the irrigation system for the protection and irrigation of the Indian lands on the Papago Indian Reservation, Ariz., and report thereon to Congress at the beginning of its next session, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 8, to insert:

For the purpose of enabling the Secretary of the Interior to carry into effect the provisions of the sixth article of the treaty of June 8, 1868, between the United States and the Navajo Nation or Tribe of Indians, proclaimed August 12, 1868, whereby the United States agrees to provide school facilities for the children of the Navajo Tribe of Indians, the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. In carrying out the authority hereby conferred the said Secretary may expend said funds, in his discretion, in establishing day schools or other industrial schools, tribal habits and climatic conditions being considered, suitable for the education of said Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 23, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to make an investigation of the conditions on the White Mountain, or San Carlos, Indian Reservation, in the State of Arizona, with respect to the necessity of constructing suitable steel and concrete wagon bridges, with approaches thereto, across the San Carlos Creek and the Gila River, in the vicinity of San Carlos, on said reservation, and also to cause surveys, plans, and reports to be made, together with an estimated limit of the cost for the construction of said bridges, at such sites as he may select, and submit his report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1912; and the sum of $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purposes herein authorized.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make the point of order that that amendment proposes general legislation and that the amount proposed to be appropriated is not estimated for.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I realize that the point of order made by the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] may be dangerous to this appropriation of $2,000. Far be it from me to seek, for any purpose whatever, any strained ruling or strained construction of any rule which would give to Arizona or to any other State money to be expended within a State contrary to our rules. My remarks, therefore, will be directed more to the Senator from Kansas than to the Senate, if I may be permitted to so address him, in order to induce him to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. President, the necessity for this bridge at the point described in the amendment offered by the Senate committee is so great that my duty requires I should say a word here in its behalf.

The first main tributary of the Gila River is the San Francisco River, which comes into the Gila at or near Clifton. At the town of Duncan, about 20 miles above Clifton, in Arizona, the river begins to assume considerable proportions. The next important tributary is the San Carlos, which flows into the Gila River on the San Carlos Indian Reservation. These streams—that is, the Gila River and the San Carlos—are torrential rather than perennial. At times the Gila River would float a battleship, and during such periods of high water all traffic is suspended, farming lands are destroyed, and the commerce of that part of the country is wholly and completely suspended by reason of the raging and turbulent waters.

It was my intention, when I came to this distinguished body, to ask for a direct appropriation of $100,000 for the purpose of constructing a bridge there. After serving here for a few weeks, I learned that it would be impossible to secure such appropriation just now. Therefore this amendment has been reported by the committee. It simply authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the situation, and if, in his opinion, when he makes his report to the next Congress, the bridge should be built there an appropriation may be secured.

I earnestly hope the Senator will withdraw his point of order. I desire at this time to say that this proposed bridge is favored by the department, and I request to have read at the desk the letter in which the department states that this bridge should be built. The department has no objection to it.

With the permission of the Senate, I will ask that that letter be read now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Land contracts, 36118, 1911; 13579, 1912. R. J. H. Proposed bridges.]

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, April 2, 1912.

MR. ABRAHAM L. LAWSHE,
Superintendent San Carlos School.

SIR: Referring to your letter of February 6, 1912, regarding proposed bridges across the Gila and San Carlos Rivers, there is inclosed for your information a copy of departmental report of March 25, 1912, to the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives, on the subject.

Respectfully,
H. ABBOTT,
Assistant Commissioner.

[I-21497. Land contracts, 16794, 1911; 13579, 1912. R. J. H. H. R. 1682.]

MARCH 25, 1912.

Hon. W. C. ADAMSON,
Chairman Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to departmental letter of May 12, 1911, reporting on H. R. 1682, the purpose of which is "to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct bridges across the San Carlos and Gila Rivers on the White Mountain or San Carlos Indian Reservation, in the Territory of Arizona, and for other purposes."

Section 2 of the bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to select the most available sites for such purpose at points on said rivers "not to exceed 3 miles above the confluence."

In its letter of May 12, the department referred to the fact that there were pending certain applications involving the San Carlos reservoir site, and that if application to construct a dam were granted, the banks of both the Gila and San Carlos Rivers would be submerged to points in excess of 3 miles above the confluence.

In connection with this case there is inclosed a copy of a report dated February 6, 1912, from the superintendent in charge of the San Carlos Reservation, who thinks it would be entirely feasible to construct bridges within 3 miles of the confluence of the two rivers, as the shallowness of the water would make such construction easily possible. The department would be much pleased to see the proposed legislation enacted into law, and an appropriation made available for constructing the bridges which would be an important factor in the development of that section of the country. It seems that the citizens of Arizona are making special efforts to construct good roads and to open up a transcontinental highway of which the proposed bridges would be a part.

While the superintendent's letter of February 6 indicates that in all probability bridges could easily be constructed within the 3 miles of the confluence of the rivers, yet to obviate the contingency of having the proposed improvements defeated by reason of circumstances which would make it impossible to construct at sites within the limit named in the bill, the department respectfully suggests that the bill be amended by striking out in lines 12 and 13 of page 1 the words "not to exceed 3 miles above the confluence of said rivers."

If the bill be so amended, the department respectfully suggests that it be favorably considered and reported.

Respectfully,
SAMUEL ADAMS,
First Assistant Secretary.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it is true that not all of the letter is pertinent to this particular amendment, but I had it all read in order that it might not go in the RECORD in a fragmentary or broken condition.

That is all I wish to say at this time.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator to designate the lines where this amendment is found.

Mr. ASHURST. The amendment commences on page 16, line 24, and extends down to and includes line 13, on page 17. The amendment offered by the committee simply calls for an appropriation of $2,000 in order that the Secretary of the Interior may make an estimate as to the necessity for a bridge there.

Mr. HEYBURN. This is on an Indian reservation?

Mr. ASHURST. It is, sir.

Mr. HEYBURN. And on a navigable river?

Mr. ASHURST. At times the river assumes the proportions of a navigable river.

Mr. HEYBURN. Not practically navigable?

Mr. ASHURST. No.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. ASHURST. Most certainly I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. The letter that has been read, of course, is not an estimate, and can not be so construed. There are quite a number of bridge items in the bill. If this one is agreed to, all the others should be agreed to. I judge from the letter that the bridge is needed, and, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection to building bridges where they are needed. I think, however, the Government is going too extensively into the building of bridges on reservations that are likely to be soon opened to settlement; but I withdraw the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is withdrawn, and, without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 17, after line 13, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to make an investigation of the conditions on the Yuma Indian Reservation, in the State of California, with respect to the necessity of constructing a suitable thoroughfare bridge of sufficient strength and capacity to safely carry street cars, in addition to foot and wagon traffic, over and across the Colorado River, connecting Fort Yuma, on the Yuma Indian Reservation, Imperial County, State of California, with the town of Yuma, State of Arizona, and also to cause surveys, plans, and reports to be made, together with an estimated limit of the cost for the construction of said bridge, at such a site as he may select, and submit his report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1912; and the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose herein authorized.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make the point of order against that amendment. I should like to ask the Senator, if the Chair will permit the inquiry before ruling upon the point of order, whether that bridge, if constructed, will be wholly within an Indian reservation?

Mr. ASHURST. A frank reply, which of course is always given by a Senator, requires me to say that it will not be wholly within an Indian reservation.

Mr. CURTIS. Then, Mr. President, I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. ASHURST. Before the ruling I should like to say a few words if, under the rule, I may be permitted to do so. Appreciating very much the withdrawal of the other point of order, I insist most strenuously—respectfully, of course—that the point of order against this amendment also be withheld for the following reasons: The great Colorado River is anomalous in America. It has no parallel on this hemisphere; it has a parallel only in one place, and that is in Africa—the Nile. The Colorado River is very long; it flows some 1,700 miles without being spanned by a wagon bridge. Like the Nile, it flows a thousand miles without a tributary. Like the Nile, it rises in June and spreads out for a number of miles on either side of its banks and irrigates alluvial soil which is so rich that it could be transported to Canada and used for fertilizing purposes if it were not for the prohibitive freight rates. At high water means of communication between the two banks are almost completely shut off.

It has been determined by the unanimous voice of the great Southwest, which includes southern California and the States of Arizona and New Mexico, that at this advanced stage of civilization, in this morning of the twentieth century, at this time when the ingenuity of man is making such progress in means and ways which make for the facility of transportation, it is almost a reproach to civilization that there is no wagon or automobile bridge across that great river.

Not long since, the President of the United States sent a message to Congress asking an appropriation of a million or more dollars in order that the banks on either side of the river might be revetted and riprapping built to protect the farms on both sides of the river from the raging overflow. The Colorado River almost defies, if a river could defy, the very law of nature. At one time of the year it chooses a particular course or channel; and at another time of the year, or possibly another year, it chooses another place whither it shall go. On the Arizona side of the river, which would be the eastern abutment of the proposed bridge, is the prosperous city of Yuma, a marvel of industry and progress. Directly across the river, on the California side, is the Indian reservation. Many Indians—and they are strong swimmers—have been drowned there even when the river was at low water, for the reason that it is very heavily charged and impregnated with silt, and even the strongest swimmer is in danger. But consider that river in a raging, turbulent condition, such as the press dispatches announce it has been in for the last few weeks, and the necessity for a wagon bridge across it becomes apparent.

It may be, and it doubtless is, that this amendment proposed by the committee is obnoxious to the rule of the Senate. If it be obnoxious, I most respectfully insist, with all the earnestness at my command, that such a rule ought to be abrogated, because we ought not to have a rule which will stand in the way of the requirements of advancing civilization. I am very sorry if the rule does prevent the appropriation of a thousand dollars in order that an investigation may be made by the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the suitability or the necessity of a bridge at that point.

Mr. CURTIS. I insist on the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On what ground does the Senator raise the objection?

Mr. CURTIS. It is general legislation, and the item was not estimated for by the department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is constrained to sustain the point of order made by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, of course I accept the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator that he did not understand the Senator to contest the ruling. The Chair was ready to give full weight to any suggestion the Senator might make on the other side of the matter.

Mr. ASHURST. The Chair ruled correctly.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 18, after line 6, to insert:

For salary due Clarence I. Stacy, supervisor of ditches, Pima Indian Reservation, Ariz., from April 8, 1911, to October 25, 1911, at $1,200 per annum, $660.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make the point of order against that item, because it was not estimated for. But surely there must be some reason for the committee having put it in, and I will ask the acting chairman of the committee if he will explain why that and the next item were put in this bill?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, these items were inserted for the reason that some time ago there was trouble down there—I do not know the details of it nor would they be material—and these two employees were suspended pending an investigation or examination. The result of the investigation was that they were reinstated, but the comptroller held that he could not allow their pay for this time in view of the fact that they had been formally suspended. Consequently there is no way in which they can get their pay except by a direct appropriation. I trust the Senator will withhold his point of order.

Mr. CURTIS. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. President.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 18, after line 11, to insert:

For salary due N. D. Brayton on physician on the Pima Indian Reservation, Ariz., from April 7, 1911, to November 14, 1911, inclusive, at the rate of $1,200 a year, $726.67.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 17, to insert:

For constructing dike to protect allotments on the Fort Mojave Indian Reservation, $33,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to make the point of order that that was not estimated for, and to ask the acting chairman of the committee whether that item was inserted at the request of the department?

Mr. ASHURST. It was estimated for.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes, sir; it was estimated for, as the record shows.

Mr. CURTIS. Then I withdraw my point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 18, after line 19, to insert:

For continuing the construction of necessary channels and laterals for the utilization of water in connection with the pumping plant for irrigation purposes on the Colorado River Indian Reservation, Ariz., as provided in the act of April 4, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 273), for the purpose of securing an appropriation of water for the irrigation of approximately 150,000 acres of land and for maintaining and operating the pumping plant, $35,000, reimbursable as provided in said act. (Act of Apr. 4, 1910, vol. 36, p. 273, sec. 3.)

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "California," on page 19, line 19, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty-three," and in line 20, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred and four" and insert "one hundred and seventeen," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 550 Indian pupils at the Sherman Institute, Riverside, Cal., and for pay of superintendent, $94,350; for general repairs and improvements, $23,000; in all, $117,350.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 25, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eighteen" and insert "one hundred," so as to make the clause read:

For the balance of the first annual reclamation and maintenance charge on Yuma allotments and for the second and third annual charge and maintenance $100,000, or so much thereof as may be required, to be reimbursed from the sale of surplus lands or from other funds that may be available, in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1911.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Idaho," on page 21, after line 4, to insert:

To reimburse Peter Moctelmy, a member of the Coeur d'Alene Tribe of Indians, for damages sustained by him because of the sale by the United States to the State of Idaho of land for a State park on a portion of which the said Peter Moctelmy made his home, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Kansas," on page 21, line 21, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred and twenty-seven" and insert "one hundred and twenty-nine"; in line 22, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "eleven," and in line 23, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred and thirty-seven" and insert "one hundred and forty," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 750 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Haskell Institute, Lawrence, Kans., and for pay of superintendent, $129,750; for general repairs and improvements, $11,000; in all, $140,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "three thousand" and insert "five thousand five hundred," and in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventeen thousand eight hundred and sixty" and insert "twenty thousand three hundred and sixty," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 80 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Kickapoo Reservation, Kans., and for pay of superintendent, $14,860; for general repairs and improvements, $5,500; in all, $20,360.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Michigan," on page 22, after line 22, to insert:

That the sum of $116.37 be, and the same is hereby, reappropriated for the purpose of paying the claim of John E. Meyer, of Shepherd, Mich., for the balance due him on construction of certain wells at the Mount Pleasant Indian School, located at Mount Pleasant, Mich., in the years 1901 and 1902, the appropriation out of which such balance should have been paid having heretofore lapsed.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I do not like to make a point of order against that item, but it sounds to me like a claim. I wish the acting chairman of the committee would explain why the item was put in here without an estimate.

Mr. CLAPP. In one sense, of course, it is a claim, although not in the ordinary sense of the word. This man entered into a contract to sink a well. He made three attempts, and the third attempt was successful. The department, after reviewing the case, recommends, in view of all the circumstances, that this amount be paid him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAMBERLAIN in the chair). The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Minnesota," on page 23, line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "five"; in line 16, after the word "sheds," to insert "for the construction of a drain from the head of Pipestone Falls east in the bed of the creek to a point where it turns south, from thence east to the section line, $1,500"; and, in line 20, before the word "hundred," to strike out "forty-three thousand six" and insert "forty-six thousand one," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 225 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Pipestone, Minn., and for pay of superintendent, $39,175; for general repairs and improvements, $5,500, $1,500 of which shall be used for the installation of an electric lighting system and $500 of which shall be used for the construction of coal sheds; for the construction of a drain from the head of Pipestone Falls east in the bed of the creek to a point where it turns south, from thence east to the section line, $1,500; in all, $46,175.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 19, to insert:

That there is hereby appropriated the sum of $700 in addition to the $1,000 heretofore appropriated for the construction of a bridge across Clearwater River on the Red Lake Indian Reservation in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make the point of order on that amendment, but I would like to ask if the bridge is wholly within an Indian reservation? If so, I shall withdraw the point.

Mr. CLAPP. It is on the reservation. The appropriation of $1,000 was made a year ago, and it was found that it was not sufficient, so that the committee inserted an item carrying the additional $700.

Mr. CURTIS. I withdraw the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, at the top of page 25, to insert:

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any funds in the possession of the United States and belonging to the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, of which $85,000 shall be used to procure a site or sites and thereon to construct, furnish, and equip a building or buildings to be used as a hospital or hospitals as hereinafter directed; and of which $15,000 shall be used for the operation and maintenance of the said hospital during the 12 months next after its completion.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, to save the time of reading, I should like to make a point of order against the amendments commencing at the top of page 25 and ending on page 28, line 9.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I must concede that the point is well taken. In view of that, I do not see any necessity of taking the time of the Senate with the full reading. Of course, I should like to have the items in the bill, but they are undoubtedly subject to the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

The remaining amendments ruled out on the point of order were on page 25, after line 10, to insert:

That the said hospital or hospitals shall be called the Minnesota Chippewa Hospital and shall be open to all Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota who can qualify for admission as hereinafter provided. It shall be under the control and government of a board of directors, who shall be called the board of governors of the Minnesota Chippewa Hospital. Said board shall consist of three members, one of whom shall be the Secretary of the State Board of Health of Minnesota, who shall be ex-officio chairman of said board of governors, and two of whom shall serve for a term of five years, one to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior and one to be chosen by the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota.

The representative of the Indians on said board shall be selected by a council of the Indians to meet at White Earth, Minn., consisting of delegates from the several bands of Chippewa Indians in Minnesota, each band being entitled to 1 delegate for each 100 members or major fraction thereof. The said board of governors shall meet at the hospital as occasion requires and at least once every two months. As compensation the said governors shall receive $3 per day while attending meetings of the board and their actual and necessary traveling expenses within the State of Minnesota.

That immediately upon the approval of this act and the selection of the board of governors, or a majority thereof, the said board shall proceed to acquire a suitable site in the State of Minnesota and thereon construct, furnish, and equip the said hospital. The title of the said site or sites shall be taken in the name of the Board of Governors of the Minnesota Chippewa Hospital as trustees for the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota. One part or building of said hospital shall be adapted for and devoted to the care of patients afflicted with tuberculosis; one part or building shall be adapted for and devoted to the care of patients afflicted with contagious or infectious diseases; one part or building shall be adapted for and devoted to the care of patients suffering from old age, debility, or other bodily infirmities. Said board of governors shall also immediately appoint one physician, without regard to civil-service rules or requirements, who shall be regularly qualified to practice in the State of Minnesota, who shall receive a salary not exceeding $3,500 per annum, and who shall be selected without regard to civil-service rules. The said physician shall give his entire time, from the date of appointment, to the said hospital, first in its construction and later in its operation. He shall be the attending physician and known as the superintendent.

That admission to the said hospital shall be upon the order of a majority of the board of governors, save in emergency cases admission may be on the order of the superintendent, subject to approval by the board at its next meeting. Only the following, who are also Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, shall be entitled to admission for care and treatment.

Indians afflicted with tuberculosis or some contagious, infectious, or fatal diseases.

Indians who by reason of age or bodily infirmities are unable to earn a livelihood and who have not means with which to procure necessaries.

Applications may be made by anyone in person or by others on behalf of such person, which application shall set forth the facts of the case, and be accompanied by a certificate setting forth the merits of the case signed by a physician. Discharge from the hospital shall be by order of the board of governors.

That the said board of governors shall appoint such hospital attendants as may be needed in the operation of said hospital and make such rules and regulations and perform such other acts as may be appropriate or necessary in said operation and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

This appropriation shall be immediately available and all moneys drawn hereunder shall be drawn from the Treasury of the United States upon vouchers signed by the chairman of said board of governors.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Montana," on page 28, line 13, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty-five," so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of the Indians at Fort Belknap Agency, Mont., including pay of employees, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 5, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "four," so as to read:

For continuing the construction of irrigation systems to irrigate the allotted lands of the Indians of the Flathead Reservation, in Montana, and the unallotted irrigable lands to be disposed of under authority of law, including the necessary surveys, plans, and estimates, $400,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I hope that amendment will not be agreed to. The estimate was only $250,000. It seems to me that without an estimate or a statement from the department, that that amount of money is needed, it is too large an increase to make to go from $200,000 to $400,000. I, for one, would have no objection to the department being given what they estimated—$250,000—but I hope the amendment making the amount $400,000 will be disagreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, before that is disagreed to I should like to have the report read in reference to that particular section. I am assuming that there is a report on it, and that the reason is given for the additional amount.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator from North Dakota desires, I will read the paragraph of the report relating to this item:

The amendment on page 28, line 10, increasing the appropriation for the construction of the irrigation system on the Flathead Indian Reservation from $200,000 to $400,000, $50,000 to be made available, and striking out lines 13 to 16 of said item, was reported on favorably by the department under date of April 4, 1912. The department is of the opinion that it is more economical to expend larger sums during shorter periods so as to complete the project at the earliest date practicable. Overhead charges on large projects remain about the same, whether the amount expended be large or small. The department is also of the opinion that the work should not be limited to any particular unit, as that would cause discontent among Indians on other units within the reservation.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think there was some testimony before the committee on that particular question.

Mr. CLAPP. There was.

Mr. McCUMBER. If I remember rightly, the purport of the testimony was in effect that it would be a considerable saving to the Government to appropriate the necessary amount now and to continue and complete the work as soon as possible; and it was necessary to appropriate the full amount in order that we might have a completion and save the work that had already been done on the project. I confess that I am not entirely clear as to what the testimony was on that line, but I think it justified the committee in asking that the sum be added at the present time as proposed.

Mr. CLAPP. The statement of the Senator from North Dakota is practically the evidence we had before the committee and the same consideration applies to some other items. The Indian Office was of the opinion that it would result in an economy in the end to have the appropriation made now instead of stringing it out at later periods.

Mr. CURTIS. In view of the fact that the Montana Senators are absent, I suggest that we pass over the Montana amendments and take them all up at one time. I understand there are other amendments in the bill to be passed over, and I presume there will be no objection to this course.

Mr. CLAPP. There is no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the amendments under the heading "Montana" will be passed over for the present.

The next amendment, after those passed over, was, under the head of "Nebraska," on page 34, line 5, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "six," and in line 10, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty-five" and insert "sixty-eight," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Genoa, Nebr., and for pay of superintendent, $52,100; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; to complete the construction of two dormitories provided for in the Indian appropriation act of March 3, 1911, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available; in all, $68,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 10, to insert:

For construction of septic tank on sewer main at the Indian school at Genoa, Nebr., $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 13, to insert:

For cottage for superintendent of Indian school at Genoa, Nebr., $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 15, to insert:

For additions to hospital and office at the Genoa Indian School, Genoa, Nebr., $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 18, to insert:

That jurisdiction be, and hereby is, conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render final judgment for any balance found due the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota Bands of Sioux Indians, otherwise known as Santee Sioux Indians, with right of appeal as in other cases, for any annuities which may be due to said bands of Indians under and by virtue of the treaties between said bands of Indians and the United States, dated September 29, 1837 (7 Stat. L., 538), and August 5, 1851 (10 Stat. L., 954), as if the act of forfeiture of the annuities of said bands, approved February 16, 1863, had not been passed: Provided, That the court, in rendering judgment, shall ascertain and include therein the amount of accrued annuities under the treaty of September 29, 1837, up to the date of the passage of this act and shall determine and include the present value of the same, not including interest, and the capital sum of said annuity, which shall be in lieu of said perpetual annuity granted in said treaty; and to ascertain and set off against any amount found due under said treaties all moneys paid to said Indians or expended for their benefit by the Government of the United States since the treaties were abrogated by the act of 1863, except such amounts as have been paid them under the treaty of 1868 or for an otherwise adequate consideration.

That upon the rendition of such judgment, and in conformity therewith, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to determine which of said Indians now living took part in said outbreak, and to prepare a roll of the persons entitled to share in said judgment by placing on said roll the names of all living members of the said bands residing in the United States at the time of the passage of this act, excluding therefrom the names of those found to have participated in the outbreak; and he is directed to distribute the proceeds of such judgment, except as hereinafter provided, per capita, to the persons borne on the said roll.

Proceedings shall be commenced by petition verified by one of the attorneys who have been heretofore or may be hereafter employed by said bands of Indians to prosecute their claims under this act under a contract which has been approved or which shall hereafter be approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior as provided by law, upon information and belief as to the existence of the facts stated in said petition, and no other verification shall be necessary. Upon final determination of the cause the Court of Claims shall decree such fees as the court shall find to be reasonable upon a quantum meruit for services performed or to be performed to be paid to the attorney or attorneys so employed by the said bands of Indians and their associates, and the same shall be paid out of the balance found to be due said bands of Indians when an appropriation therefor shall have been made by Congress: Provided, That in no case shall the fees decreed by the court amount in the aggregate to more than 10 per cent of the amount of the judgment recovered, and in no event shall the aggregate amount exceed $25,000: Provided further, That the court shall by its decree distribute such fees equitably between the attorneys who have been or may hereatfer be employed by said bands of Indians in said cause.

Mr. CURTIS. I make the point of order against the amendment beginning on line 17, page 34, and ending line 5, page 37. It is general legislation and subject to a point of order under Rule XVI.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to suggest that this is a provision, as I understand it, to carry out a treaty stipulation, and if it is to carry out a treaty stipulation it removes it from the operation of the rule relating to general legislation.

Mr. CURTIS. This identical question has been raised upon two different occasions on amendments similar to this, and each time the point of order was sustained on the ground that it was general legislation. If the Senator desires, I can get those authorities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is inclined to believe that if it is to carry out a treaty stipulation, as suggested by the Senator from North Dakota, the point of order is not well taken under Rule XVI.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, this is simply a claim against the Government. It repeals a law which was passed, as I recollect it, in 1863, which repealed the treaty and took away from these Indians their rights to annuities and other rights under the treaty. That treaty was done away with in 1863; the right was taken away; and now by this bill it is proposed to give these Indians an opportunity to go into court to have their rights reestablished. It virtually repeals the act of 1863.

Furthermore, on page 36, line 8, it provides for the employment of attorneys which is not provided for in any treaty with any Indians, and it provides for fixing the fees of the attorneys, which are not provided for in any treaty with the Indians. As I said before, this same question was raised on an identical claim upon two former occasions in the Senate, and the point of order was sustained.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator is a little in error about the amendment repealing any other law. This case grew out of the Indian massacre in Minnesota in 1862. Prior to that time a treaty had been entered into between the United States and the Wahpeton and Sisseton Bands of Sioux Indians. Under that agreement, as I now recall it, certain annuities were to be paid to those Indians. A provision was contained in the treaty requiring the Indians as a nation to keep peace with the United States, and, I think, with a provision in it for the abrogation of the annuity in case the tribe as a nation did not maintain peace with the United States.

In 1862, while the Civil War was in progress, a certain number of the Wahpeton and Sisseton Bands of Indians and of the bands mentioned here committed heinous depredations upon white settlers. The President of the United States then, as I remember, by an order, abrogated the treaty, and it was not done by a legislative act. I stand ready to be corrected in that respect if I am in error.

Mr. CURTIS. The amendment itself says:

With right of appeal as in other cases, for any annuities which may be due to said bands of Indians under and by virtue of the treaties between said bands of Indians and the United States, dated September 29, 1837 (7 Stat. L., 538), and August 5, 1851 (10 Stat. L., 954), as if the act of forfeiture of the annuities of said bands approved February 16, 1863, had not been passed.

In other words, this act repeals the act of 1863.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let us suppose that that is all true and that an act was passed repealing another act. The original act was a treaty. The treaty was a contract between the Government of the United States and the Sioux Nation of Indians. The treaty took certain lands of the Indians and in consideration agreed to pay them certain annuities for a given number of years. There was a contract fully executed upon the part of the Sioux Nation and the United States. The Sioux Nation relinquished its claim to a very large section of the country. The annuities fell due. The annuities were paid for a given number of years. They were paid until this uprising by a number of the bands. Then the question arose, and it was the only question, whether or not the act of the depredators was an act by the nation. Congress, acting rather hurriedly, and influenced undoubtedly by the atrocities of the Indians in that massacre, passed the act referred to, which abrogated the treaty.

Now, Mr. President, after these many years and the blood of the nation is allowed to cool, I think the country generally concedes that we were hasty and unjust in punishing the entire Sioux Nation for the acts of some of their followers who could not be controlled by the old leaders of the nation.

Therefore, the treaty itself in all moral law still exists, and the question before us is whether we shall, notwithstanding this abrogation, fulfill the treaty stipulation. It is based upon a treaty; it is to carry out the terms of a treaty; and the fact that we may have been hasty in passing a law abrogating that treaty would not take it without the rule.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the point that was raised in the Fifty-fourth Congress, second session.

On motion by Mr. Allen to further amend the same bill by inserting, after line 6, page 34—

And if the Chair will read the amendment he will see that the amendments are almost identical—

That the Santee Sioux Indians of Nebraska and the Flandreau Sioux of South Dakota, formerly known as and being a confederacy of the Medawakanton and Wapakoota Sioux Indians, be, and they are hereby, restored to all rights, privileges, and benefits they and their ancestors had and enjoyed under the treaty entered into September 29, 1837, at the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, between Joel R. Poinsett, on behalf of the Government of the United States, and the Medawakanton Sioux Indians, by certain of their chief men, proclaimed June 15, 1838, and the treaty entered into between the United States, through Luke Lea and Alexander Ramsey, as commissioners, and the Medawakanton and Wapakoota Sioux Indians, by certain of their chief men and proclaimed by Millard Fillmore as President of the United States, August 5, 1851, and all treaties and acts of Congress supplementary thereto and amending thereto, etc.

Mr. Allison raised a question or order, viz: That the amendment proposed general legislation to a general appropriation bill and was not in order under clause 3, Rule XVI.

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Faulkner in the chair) sustained the point or order.

In another Congress the same amendment was offered and the point of order was again sustained, because it repealed the act of 1863, which took away from the Indians all their right under former treaties. The courts have held that a treaty with the Indians is nothing more than an act of Congress and it may be repealed and it was repealed by the act of 1863.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, it is true that the decisions referred to have been made, but the more one studies these acts the more he is inclined to think, with due deference to the presiding officers at the time, that the decisions were not correct. It is also true that Congress arbitrarily, in 1863, did pass an act purporting to forfeit the rights under a treaty between the Government and the Indians. The courts have gone a long way toward holding that the United States Government can contract with an Indian, the Indian in the Constitution of the United States being recognized as competent to make contracts, because it is one of the functions of Congress to deal with foreign nations and Indian tribes; but the fact remains that without any act on the part of the Indians as a tribe consenting to the act of Congress of 1863 Congress passed that act.

Now, the outbreak of 1862 was perhaps one of the most atrocious in the history of this country, but the evidence was so overwhelming and the sense of gratitude to a part of those Indians who, against the rashness of the younger members of the band, protested and opposed the massacre, and the outbreak of the Indians was so recognized, that almost 20 years ago an illustrious predecessor of mine, Senator Davis, on the floor of the Senate demonstrated the injustice of the act of 1863. That act was born of the passions that were engendered by that outbreak.

This measure is not in the nature of creating a claim. It is simply for the purpose of ascertaining what the value of those annuities thus sought to be forfeited by the act of 1863 amounted to. Those annuities were due and they are due to-day under the terms of that treaty.

The only difference between this amendment and an amendment appropriating the money for the annuities is that instead of Congress seeking without any further instrumentalities than they had an ascertainment of the value of the annuities it is proposed to send the matter to the court that the court may investigate the value of the annuities. The fact that it provides for procedure in court is none the less carrying out the terms of the agreement, because we ourselves have abandoned the other process of carrying out the terms of those treaties, which would be for Congress to directly appropriate the money.

That is all I care to say upon the subject. As I said, it engendered a great deal of passion at the time. The outbreak was one of the most diabolical ever known. Yet the people who had been part and parcel of those who suffered so recognized the debt that they owed some of these Indians who opposed the outbreak that 20 years ago, when the feeling had far less died out than it is to-day—and it took time for it to die out—the then senior Senator from that State not only urged this provision, but demonstrated the justice of settling the matter in some way, and surely no more just way can be found than to let the Court of Claims ascertain the value of the annuities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It seems to the Chair that the amendment simply proposes to transfer to the courts the right to determine whether or not there are any annuities due under the treaty. The court can in that same proceeding determine whether the treaty provision has been repealed, as insisted by the Senator from Kansas. If it sustains the repeal there can be no claim and there would be no adjudication or determination.

Mr. CURTIS. But, Mr. President, the provision of the bill provides in so many words that that decision shall be made regardless of the act of Congress repealing the former treaty.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; that is true, Mr. President. I would not have the occupant of the chair labor under a false impression as to the terms of the amendment. It provides that the court shall entertain the case and act upon it "as if the act of forfeiture of the annuities of said bands, approved February 16, 1863, had not been passed."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In other words, does the Senator think the amendment reinstates the act that was repealed?

Mr. CLAPP. It would amount to a legislative declaration that that act ought not to stand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In view of that situation, the Chair thinks the point of order is well taken. The Chair had not an opportunity to read the amendment, and supposed that it adjudicated the rights of the parties under the treaty if valid, and not to reinstate a treaty that had been repealed. Then it is not an appropriation made in pursuance of any treaty. The point of order is, therefore, sustained.

The next amendment was, under the head of "New Mexico," on page 37, line 20, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "six"; in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "for addition to girls' dormitory, including heating plant, $10,000"; and in line 22, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty-six" and insert "sixty-seven," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Albuquerque, N. Mex., and for pay of superintendent, $51,900; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; for addition to girls' dormitory, including heating plant, $10,000; in all, $67,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "six," and in line 3, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty-six" and insert "fifty-nine," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Santa Fe, N. Mex., and for pay of superintendent, $51,900; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; for water supply, $1,600; in all, $59,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 4, to strike out:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to make an investigation of the conditions on the Navajo Indian Reservation at Shiprock, N. Mex., with respect to the necessity of constructing a bridge across the San Juan River at Shiprock on said reservation, and also to cause surveys, plans, and reports to be made, together with an estimated limit cost for the construction of a suitable bridge at that place, and submit his report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1912, and the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purpose herein authorized.

And insert:

For the construction of a bridge across the San Juan River at Shiprock, N. Mex., on the Navajo Indian Reservation, to be immediately available, $16,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 20, to insert:

For the pay of one special attorney for the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico and for necessary traveling expenses of said attorney, $4,000, or so much thereof as the Secretary of the Interior may deem necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "New York," on page 39, after line 9, to strike out:

For pay of one special agent, at $1,050; one physician, at $600; and one financial clerk, at $600 per annum, in addition to employees otherwise provided for at the New York Agency; in all, $2,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "North Carolina," on page 39, line 20, after the word "dollars," to insert "for rebuilding employees' quarters destroyed by fire, $6,000," and in line 22, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-eight" and insert "thirty-four," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 180 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Cherokee, N. C., and for pay of superintendent, $26,650; for general repairs and improvements, $2,000; for rebuilding employees' quarters destroyed by fire, $6,000; in all, $34,650.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 23, to insert:

For the purchase of a site at or near the town of Pembroke, Robeson County, N. C., and the erection thereon of a suitable building for a school for the Indians of Robeson County, N. C., the sum of $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "North Dakota," on page 40, after line 11, to insert:

To assist members of Turtle Mountain Tribe of Indians in making settlement upon their noureservation allotments, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 18, after the word "dollars," to insert "for the purchase of water and irrigation for the growing of trees, shrubs, and garden truck, $2,500"; and in line 22, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty thousand two hundred" and insert "twenty-two thousand seven hundred," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Bismarck, N. Dak., and for pay of superintendent, $18,200; for general repairs and improvements, $2,000; for the purchase of water and irrigation for the growing of trees, shrubs, and garden truck, $2,500; in all, $22,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "six"; in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "$2,000 of which shall be immediately available"; and in line 4, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-two" and insert "seventy-four," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 400 Indian pupils at Fort Totten Indian School, Fort Totten, N. Dak., and for pay of superintendent, $68,500; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; in all, $74,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 5, after the word "hundred," to insert "and fifty"; in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "eighteen thousand two hundred" and insert "twenty-eight thousand five hundred"; in line 9, after the word "improvements," to insert "including fencing of building grounds"; in line 10, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "three"; in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "for erection of silo and purchase of ensilage cutter and other farm machinery, $2,000; for purchase of milch cows and other live stock and poultry, $2,000; for erection of hospital building and equipment of same, $25,000"; and in line 16, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty thousand two hundred" and insert "sixty thousand five hundred," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 150 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Wahpeton, N. Dak., and pay of superintendent, $28,500; for general repairs and improvements, including fencing of building grounds, $3,000; for erection of silo and purchase of ensilage cutter and other farm machinery, $2,000; for purchase of milch cows and other live stock and poultry, $2,000; for erection of hospital building and equipment of same, $25,000; in all, $60,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 16, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Indians of the Standing Rock Indian Reservation in the States of North Dakota and South Dakota, immediately after the passage and approval of this act, out of moneys derived from the sale of certain of their lands under the act of May 29, 1908, and now in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Indians, a $40 per capita cash payment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Oklahoma," on page 42, line 12, after the word "benefit," to strike out: "and he is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury the further sum of $40,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds on deposit to the credit of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, for the construction and equipment of an Indian hospital upon the Fort Sill Indian School Reservation in Oklahoma, to be used only for the benefit of Indians belonging to said tribes; in all, $65,000," so as to make the clause read:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds on deposit to the credit of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, for the support of the agency and pay of employees maintained for their benefit.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, after line 20, to insert:

For the purpose of fitting up the old agency and other buildings of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Agency for hospital purposes and the construction of other hospitals, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 43, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the administrator of the estate of John W. West, deceased, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States, standing to the credit of the Cherokee Nation of Indians, the sum of $5,000 and interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from September 16, 1884, in full payment of the award made by the commission appointed pursuant to the authority contained in the seventh article of the treaty with the Cherokees promulgated August 17, 1846, and which award was approved by the Secretary September 16, 1884, and his action reaffirmed April 26, 1886.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] asked a question about that item a few moments ago. I suggest that it be passed over until his return.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Is there objection to that request?

Mr. CLAPP. There is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 11, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eight" and insert "nine," so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of the Ponca Indians in Oklahoma, including pay of employees, $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 16, before the word "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "seven," and in line 17, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ninety" and insert "ninety-one," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 500 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Chilocco, Okla., and for pay of superintendent, $83,500; for general repairs and improvements, $7,500; in all, $91,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 17, after the word "Shawnee," to strike out "Agency" and insert "Superintendency," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of 1 stenographer and typewriter, $900 per annum, in addition to employees otherwise provided for at the Shawnee Superintendency.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, after line 2, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to extend for a period of one year the time for the payment of the several annual installments due or hereafter to become due on the purchase price for lands sold under the act of Congress approved June 17, 1910, "to open to settlement and entry under the general provisions of the homestead laws of the United States certain lands in the State of Oklahoma, and for other purposes": Provided, That purchasers shall pay interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum on the deferred payments for the time of the extension herein granted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Five Civilized Tribes," on page 46, after line 13, to strike out:

SEC. 18. For expense of administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, Oklahoma, and the compensation of employees, $150,000: Provided further, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, no money shall be expended from the tribal funds belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes, except for schools, without specific appropriation by Congress.

And insert:

SEC. 18. For expenses of administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, Oklahoma, and the compensation of employees, $174,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 47, to insert:

For salaries and expenses of district agents for the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma and other employees connected with the work of such agents, $100,000: Provided, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, no moneys shall be expended from the tribal funds belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes except for schools for the ensuing year and for the equalization of allotments, per capita or other payments authorized by law to individual members of the respective tribes, and the salaries and contingent expenses of the governors, chiefs, assistant chiefs, secretaries, interpreters, and mining trustees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and attorneys of said tribes employed under contract approved by the President, without specific appropriation by Congress, except as hereinafter provided: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to continue the tribal schools of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and to use funds arising from royalties on coal and asphalt for their maintenance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, after line 19, to insert:

For payment of salaries of employees and other expenses of advertisement and sale in connection with the disposition of the unallotted lands and other tribal property belonging to any of the Five Civilized Tribes, to be paid from the proceeds of such sales when authorized by the Secretary of the Interior, as provided by the act approved March 3, 1911, not exceeding $25,000, reimbursable from proceeds of sale.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 2, to insert:

For expenses incident to and in connection with collection of tribal revenues, including rent of unallotted lands, such amount as may be necessary: Provided, however, That such expenditures shall not exceed in the aggregate 20 per cent of the amount collected.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 7, to insert:

For traveling expenses of appraisers of the surface of the Choctaw and Chickasaw coal and asphalt segregated lands, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the houses and other valuable and permanent improvements placed upon the segregated coal and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, in the State of Oklahoma, by private individuals and not purchased by the Indian nations shall be scheduled to the present owners thereof, and shall be appraised independently of the surface of the land on which they are located; and if the owners of such improvements fail to buy the surface of the lands on which their improvements are located at the highest bid, said improvements shall be sold with the lands at the appraised value with the surface of the land, and the owners of such improvements shall receive out of such purchase money the appraised value of said improvements.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 23, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to accept payment to the full amount of the purchase money due, including interest to date of payment, on any town lots originally sold as provided in agreements with any of the Five Civilized Tribes and declared forfeited by reason of nonpayment of amount due and not resold.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 16, after the date "1910," to strike out "to March 1, 1912," so as to make the clause read:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay, out of the funds of the Chickasaw Indians now on deposit in the Treasury of the United States, to Douglas H. Johnston, governor of said nation, the sum of $3,000 per annum from March 1, 1910.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 17, to insert:

For the construction of a sanitary sewer system in Platt National Park, Okla., to be immediately available and expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $35,000.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 50, line 19, in the amendment of the committee, I move to strike out the words "immediately available and."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 50, line 19, after the words "to be," in the amendment of the committee, it is proposed to strike out the words "immediately available and," so as to read:

To be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I simply want to call the attention of the acting chairman of the committee to the fact that while that item was estimated for in the sundry civil appropriation bill, I have no objection to it going into this bill; but I think that fact ought to be noted in the RECORD, so that it will be left out of the sundry civil bill.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; that is true. The item ought not to go into the sundry civil bill.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 50, after line 21, to insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the heirs or legal representatives of John W. Noble and R. V. Belt the sum of $3,569.95, for legal services rendered to and expenses incurred on behalf of members of the Lyman family, Osage allottees, under contract made pursuant to section 2103 and the following of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and duly approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, said sum to be paid as provided for in the contract out of individual funds in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the members of said Lyman family.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 9, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to satisfy of record the judgments rendered in the district court of Oklahoma, for the eighth judicial district, on December 15, 1911, in favor of Albert J. Lee and against Jack Postoak, in the sum of $1,448, by the payment thereof out of any funds that may now or hereafter be to the credit of the heirs of Bessie Postoak; against King Isaacs and others, in the sum of $1,449, by the payment thereof out of any funds that may now or hereafter be to the credit of the heirs of Roger Isaacs; against Thompson Peters, in the sum of $1,476, by the payment thereof out of any funds that may now or hereafter be to the credit of the heirs of Sookie Peters; and against Zeno Huff, in the sum of $732, by the payment thereof out of any funds that may now or hereafter be to the credit of said Zeno Huff.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 2, to insert:

The fund of $390,257.92, placed to the credit of the Choctaw Indians by act of March 1, 1907 (34 Stat. L., 1027), shall draw interest at 5 per cent per annum, and the accrued interest at this rate shall be placed to the credit of the Choctaw Nation.

Mr. CURTIS. I make the point of order against the amendment on the ground that it proposes general legislation; but I should like to ask the acting chairman why the item was inserted? The existing agreements and treaties do not fix the rate of interest to be paid to these Indians.

Mr. CLAPP. In answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Kansas I will say that the Office of Indian Affairs has asked for this appropriation on the following ground:

The amendment on page 50, lines 4 to 10, inclusive, providing that the fund of $390,257.92 placed to the credit of the Choctaw Indians by the act of March 1, 1907 (34 Stat. L., 1037), shall draw interest at 5 per cent per annum and the accrued interest at this rate shall be placed to the credit of the Choctaw Nation, was reported on favorably to the chairman of the Senate committee in letter of April 23, 1912, on H. R. 20728.

Mr. CURTIS. I withdraw the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is withdrawn. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 52, after line 9, to insert:

For incidental and necessary expenses of any suit heretofore brought at the request of the Secretary of the Interior and now pending on behalf of any of the Five Civilized Tribes, the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, reimbursable from funds belonging to the tribe in whose interest such suit was brought, or now pending.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 16, to insert:

That to carry into effect the agreement between the United States and the Muskogee (Creek) Nation of Indians ratified by act of Congress approved March 1, 1901 (31 Stats., p. 861), and the subsequent agreement of June 30, 1902 (32 Stats., p. 500), and laws providing for a minimum allotment to each Creek citizen whose name has been placed on the rolls by the Government of the United States under the authority of said agreements and laws, of the standard value of $1,040, the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to pay, out of the funds of the said nation now in the Treasury or that may hereafter come into the Treasury to their credit, to each of said Creek citizens placed on the rolls under said agreement and subsequent agreements, a sum sufficient to bring the allotment of land and money to each up to $800 as a part payment on the standard allotment of $1,040; and that jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims, with right of appeal as in other cases, to hear, determine, and render final judgment in the matter of the claim of all citizens of said nation who have received allotments of less than the standard value of $1,040, and to render judgment for a sum of money sufficient to equalize the allotments of each citizen who shall be found to be so entitled up to the standard amount of $1,040; and that the action herein authorized shall be brought in the name of the Muskogee (Creek) Nation against the United States by petition to be filed within six months after the passage of this act, which petition shall be verified by the national attorney of said nation or by the attorney or attorneys employed by said nation to conduct said suit, whose employment is approved by the Department of the Interior in accordance with section 2103 of the Revised Statutes, and the Attorney General shall appear and defend said action; and in rendering judgment in said cause the court shall fix the compensation to be paid to the attorneys upon a quantum meruit for all services rendered in behalf of said Indians in the matter of the claim of all of said citizens for the equalization of their allotments, including services rendered before the departments of the Government, the committees of Congress, and the courts, in and for their interest in this matter in any way rendered, said compensation to be based on a per cent of the amount of said judgment, less any money in the Treasury to the credit of the Creek Nation, not to exceed 10 per cent, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay said sum out of the amount of said judgment or out of any funds of the said nation in the Treasury, and all the remaining funds of said nation not appropriated by the council and approved by the President of the United States (except the sum of $50,000) shall be utilized and applied in any judgment that may be rendered under this act; and the said cause shall be advanced in hearing by the Court of Claims, and by the Supreme Court of the United States if the same shall be appealed.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is clearly legislation, in violation of Rule XVI. A point of order was sustained against the same provision a few years ago when it was offered as an amendment to the then pending Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon what ground is the point of order based?

Mr. CURTIS. On the ground that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, it is a fact that the point of order has been heretofore sustained, and in view of the scant attendance this afternoon I shall not take the time of the Senate to discuss it or suggest an appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair the point of order is well taken, and it is sustained.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 54, after line 21, to insert:

The sum of $300,000 to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, in aid of the common schools in the Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Seminole Nations in Oklahoma during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Oregon," in section 19, page 55, line 13, after the word "thousand," to insert "six hundred," so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of the Wallawalla, Cayuse, and Umatilla Tribes, Oregon, including pay of employees, $3,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 13, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to construct a bridge and the necessary approaches thereto across the Deschutes River, abutting on the Warm Springs Indian Reservation, in the State of Oregon, at a point to be agreed upon between him and the county court of Crook County, Oreg., the sum of $15,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I want to make a point of order against that amendment; but I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], the acting chairman of the committee, or the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], if the bridge is on a river that runs through an Indian reservation, and is it within the reservation?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. A part of it runs through the reservation; but where the bridge is it abuts on the reservation. At the place where the bridge is to be built the bluffs are very precipitous, and the Indians, as they now travel from the reservation, have to go down with their teams to the stream and up these precipitous bluffs.

Mr. CURTIS. Is it to accommodate the Indians on the reservation?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir; almost altogether. A recommendation was made by the department, and the estimates have also been made.

Mr. CURTIS. Then I withdraw the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 56, after line 22, to insert:

That there be paid to the Tillamook Tribe of Indians of Oregon the sum of $10,500, to be apportioned among those now living and the lineal descendants of those who may be dead, by the Secretary of the Interior, as their respective rights may appear; that there be paid to the Clatsop Tribe of Indians of Oregon the sum of $15,000, to be apportioned among those now living and the lineal descendants of those who may be dead, by the Secretary of the Interior, as their respective rights may appear; that there be paid to the Nuc-quee-clah-we-muck Tribe of Indians of Oregon the sum of $1,500, to be apportioned among those now living and the lineal descendants of those who may be dead, by the Secretary of the Interior, as their respective rights may appear; that there be paid to the Kathlamet Band of Chinook Indians of Oregon the sum of $7,000, to be apportioned among those now living and the lineal descendants of those who may be dead, by the Secretary of the Interior, as their respective rights may appear; that there be paid to the Waukikum Band of Chinook Indians of Washington the sum of $7,000, to be apportioned among those now living and the lineal descendants of those who may be dead, by the Secretary of the Interior, as their respective rights may appear; that there be paid to the Wheelappa Band of Chinook Indians of Washington the sum of $5,000, to be apportioned among those now living and the lineal descendants of those who may be dead, by the Secretary of the Interior, as their respective rights may appear; and that there be paid to the Lower Band of Chinook Indians of Washington the sum of $20,000, to be apportioned among those now living and the lineal descendants of those who may be dead, by the Secretary of the Interior, as their respective rights may appear, and for this purpose there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $66,000: Provided, That said Indians shall accept said sum, or their respective portions thereof, in full satisfaction of all demands or claims against the United States for the lands described in the agreements or unratified treaties between the United States and said Indians dated, respectively, August 7, 1851; August 5, 1851; August 7, 1851; August 9, 1851; August 8, 1851; August 9, 1851; and August 9, 1851: Provided further, That if, after investigation by the Secretary, he shall find that all of the Indians of either of said tribes or bands and their lineal descendants are dead, then none of the money hereby appropriated for such tribe or band shall be paid to any person for any purpose: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall find and investigate what attorney or attorneys, if any, have rendered services for or on behalf of said Indians, and shall fix a reasonable compensation to be paid said attorney or attorneys for their services in prosecuting the claims of said Indians hereunder, which compensation, if any, shall be paid out of the sum hereby appropriated, in full payment of services rendered; and the decision of the Secretary of the Interior with respect to the attorneys and their compensation shall be final and conclusive: Provided further, That before any money is paid to any attorney hereunder, he shall first execute and deliver to the Secretary of the Interior a satisfaction and discharge of all claims and demands for services rendered such Indians in the matter of their claims.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to make a point of order against that amendment, but during the pendency of it I should like to have the Senator from Oregon explain that claim for the purpose of getting the facts regarding it in the RECORD. As I understand, it is a claim to carry out the provisions of certain unratified treaties. Treaties made and sent to Congress were not ratified, but the Government proceeded to take possession of the lands without paying the Indians.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, that is practically a statement of the facts with reference to the matter as briefly as it can be made. These cases are like numerous other cases of sharp practice that was indulged in against the Indians in the early days on the frontier. It is rather amusing to look back at some of the treaties that were attempted to be entered into. I was just reading one to my colleague on my left [Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama], where, instead of paying the Indians money, it was agreed to give them a silk dress or a calico dress or other such things in consideration for valuable tracts of land.

These particular unratified treaties were negotiated pursuant to the acts of 1850 and 1851, which authorized commissioners to treat with the Indians and to make treaties with them for the cession of valuable tracts of land in Oregon. It had been the purpose and desire of the Government for a great many years to try to get these nomadic tribes of Indians together on one reservation, and in pursuance of that policy these treaties were made with them.

Some of the treaties were ratified, but a great many of them were not ratifid by the Senate, because it is supposed, although there is no record to show that fact, that the Indians refused to go on the reservations which had been designated by the Government. They did not care to go long distances from the places where they had been accustomed to live and where they had been accustomed to fish and hunt in times gone by.

To show you how the Government treated these people, Mr. President, I might say here that the claims under those treaties which were ratified by the Senate were paid a long while ago, and these are the only ones not paid. The Indians do not even ask interest on the amount of these claims, which I think are just. For instance, the Clatsop Indians ceded to the United States about 500,000 acres of land for a consideration of $15,000, and reserved to themselves only about 4,000 acres. The Government of the United States took that 500,000 acres of land and treated it exactly as they have treated other parts of the public domain. They have sold it, and have received the money for it; but, notwithstanding that fact, these claims have not been paid, because the Government says the Senate never ratified the treaties. That land is amongst the most valuable land in the State of Oregon; it is along the timber ridges of the Coast Range of mountains, and now, in private hands, is worth all the way from $50 to $500 an acre.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That same statement might be made with reference to all these claims. Mr. President, I am truly glad that the Senator has withdrawn the point of order, because these claims have been hung up here in the Senate for years, and ought to have been paid a long time ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas withdraws the point of order, and, without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Pennsylvania," in section 20, on page 59, line 18, before the word "thousand," to strike out "nine" and insert "twenty"; and in line 22, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred and forty-eight thousand five hundred" and insert "one hundred and fifty-nine thousand five hundred," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 20. For support and education of Indian pupils at the Indian school at Carlisle, Pa., and for pay of superintendent, $132,000; for general repairs and improvements, $20,000; for completing steam heating plant, $7,500, to be immediately available; in all, $159,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "South Dakota," in section 21, on page 60, line 2, after the word "dollars," to insert "for the construction and equipment of a gymnasium building, $8,000"; and in line 5, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty-six" and insert "seventy-four," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 21. For support and education of 365 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Flandreau, S. Dak., and for pay of superintendent, $61,500; for the construction and equipment of a gymnasium building, $8,000; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; in all, $74,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 10, before the word "thousand" where it occurs the first time, to strike out "six" and insert "seven"; and in the same line, before the word "thousand" where it occurs the second time, to strike out "thirty-eight" and insert "thirty-nine," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 175 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Pierre, S. Dak., and for pay of superintendent, $32,000; for general repairs and improvements, $7,000; in all, $39,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 16, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eight" and insert "nine"; in line 17, after the word "dollars," to insert "for a new school building, $35,000; for remodeling boys' building, $5,000"; and in line 21, before the word "dollars," to strike out "sixty-one thousand five hundred" and insert "one hundred and two thousand five hundred," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 250 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Rapid City, S. Dak., and for pay of superintendent, $48,500; for general repairs and improvements, $9,000; for completion and extension of heating plant, $5,000; for a new school building, $35,000; for remodeling boys' building, $5,000; in all, $102,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 9, after the word "dollars," to insert "for general repairs and improvements of agency buildings, $10,000; in all, $24,000," so as to make the clause read:

For subsistence and civilization of the Yankton Sioux, South Dakota, $14,000; for general repairs and improvements of agency buildings, $10,000; in all, $24,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 64, to insert:

To complete the work of straightening the Duchesne River within the limits of the town site of Duchesne, in the State of Utah, $2,000, to be immediately available and to be reimbursed to the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of lands within the ceded Uintah Indian Reservation opened to entry under the act of May 27, 1902, including the sales of lots within the said town site of Duchesne.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if the town of Duchesne, referred to in the amendment, is an Indian town or embraces Indian lands?

Mr. CLAPP. I understand it is within the reservation.

Mr. CURTIS. Is the land being sold for the benefit of the Indians?

Mr. CLAPP. Well, some of the lands are being sold. They were taken by allotment. The item is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior as necessary in order to serve the interests of the Indians on that reservation.

Mr. CURTIS. I will not make a point of order then against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 64, after line 8, to insert:

VIRGINIA.

SEC. 23. For support and education of 120 Indian pupils at the school at Hampton, Va., $20,040.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Washington," on page 64, line 21, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one thousand" and insert "one thousand five hundred," so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of the Qui-nai-elts and Quil-leh-utes, including pay of employees, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 5, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirteen" and insert "eighteen," so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of Indians at Colville and Puyallup Agencies, Wash., for pay of employees, and for purchase of agricultural implements, and support and civilization of Joseph's Band of Nez Perce Indians in Washington, $18,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 13, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "seventy-five," so as to make the clause read:

For extension and maintenance of the irrigation system on lands allotted to Yakima Indians in Washington, $75,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 1, 1907.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, after line 15, to insert:

For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Cushman Indian School, Tacoma, Wash., including repairs and improvements, and for pay of superintendent, $50,000, said appropriation being made to supplement the Puyallup School funds used for said school.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, after line 21, to insert:

That for the purpose of constructing storage reservoirs to impound flood waters of the Yakima River to provide 1,500 cubic feet of water per second of time at the reservation gates for the irrigation of 120,000 acres, more or less, on the Yakima Indian Reservation, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $1,600,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended in said works by the Reclamation Service.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, on page 65, line 23, in the committee amendment just stated, I offer an amendment which has been suggested by the department. I will say that the chairman of the committee requested me to look after the matter.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment. We might as well close the matter up now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 65, line 23, after the word "provide," it is proposed to strike out "1,500 cubic feet of water per second of time" and insert "for the total diversion of 516,000 acre-feet of stored water and natural flow during each irrigation season"; and on page 66, line 4, before the word "thousand" to strike out "six" and insert "eight" so as to make the clause read:

That for the purpose of constructing storage reservoirs to impound flood waters of the Yakima River to provide for the total diversion of 516,000 acre-feet of stored water and natural flow during each irrigation season at the reservation gates for the irrigation of 120,000 acres, more or less, on the Yakima Indian Reservation, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $1,800,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended in said works by the Reclamation Service.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 66, after line 6, to insert:

That the lands within the project on the Yakima Indian Reservation owned by Indians in fee or otherwise to the extent of 32,000 acres, estimated to be necessary for the support of Indians allotted within the project, for which a water supply of 400 cubic feet per second of time is required, shall receive water free of any and all cost or charge on account of said storage works.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, after line 13, to insert:

That other lands under Indian ownership to the extent of 70,000 acres additional, more or less, shall bear the proportionate acreage cost for providing said storage waters in the river, except that provided for in the preceding paragraph, which cost shall be a charge against said lands to be paid on such terms and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, after line 20, to insert:

That the claims for water of the owners of the remaining area of 18,000 acres, more or less, of irrigable Indian land, the Indian title to which has been extinguished, shall be equitably adjusted by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That any payments by owners of said lands on account of said storage works shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, after line 2, to insert:

That the owners of irrigable lands within the project shall pay the proportionate cost of the distribution and drainage systems upon such terms as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That no water shall be furnished as herein provided for until the owners of deeded or sold lands and Indians holding lands in fee benefited thereby shall have agreed to pay such proportionate share, such payments when received to be a part of the tribal funds of the Yakima Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Wisconsin," on page 67, line 17, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "three"; in the same line, after the word "building," to strike out "an addition" and insert "additions"; in line 18, after the word "to," to strike out "dormitory" and insert "dormitories"; in line 19, before the word "dollars," to strike out "sixteen" and insert "twenty"; and in line 19, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty-four" and insert "fifty-nine," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 25. For the support and education of 210 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Hayward, Wis., and pay of superintendent, $36,670; for general repairs and improvements, $3,000; for building additions to dormitories, $20,000; in all, $59,670.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "seven"; and in line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty-eight" and insert "fifty-two," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 250 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Tomah, Wis., and for pay of superintendent, $43,450; for repairing and rebuilding barn, $2,500; for general repairs and improvements, $7,000; in all, $52,950.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, after line 4, to insert:

For support, education, and civilization of the Pottawatomie Indians who reside in the State of Wisconsin, $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, after line 7, to insert:

The time provided for bringing suits under the fifth paragraph of section 26 of the act approved April 4, 1910, entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911 (36 Stat. L., p. 287), be, and the same is hereby, extended to the 30th day of June, 1913.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, after line 17, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of the sum of $1,500,000 set aside and held in the Treasury of the United States for the use and benefit of the Colville Indians under the provisions of an act approved June 21, 1906 (34 Stat. L., p. 337), the sum of $45,000 to Hugh H. Gordon for his individual services in behalf of said Indians, which sum of $45,000 is hereby appropriated for said Gordon's exclusive use and benefit out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the same shall be charged against the funds set aside for the benefit of said Indians.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make the point of order against that amendment, as being in violation of paragraph 3 of Rule XVI. It is general legislation on an Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I will ask the Presiding Officer to withhold his ruling in deference to the absence of the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]. With that understanding let the amendment be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the point of order made by the Senator from Kansas will be entered and further action on the matter deferred until the Senator from Georgia is present.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Wyoming," on page 69, line 12, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty-one thousand and twenty-five" and insert "thirty-two thousand five hundred"; in line 13, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "four"; and in line 15, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty-four thousand and twenty-five" and insert

"thirty-six thousand five hundred," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 175 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Shoshone Reservation, Wyo., and for pay of superintendent, $32,500; for general repairs and improvements, $4,000; in all, $36,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, after line 21, to insert:

For continuing the work of road and bridge construction on the Shoshone Reservation, Wyo., $20,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1905.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I desire, if I may be permitted to do so, to recur to page 17 of the bill where, commencing with line 14, there is an amendment reported by the committee which was discussed a few moments ago, and against which a point of order, made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], was sustained.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. If it can be done, I desire to withdraw the point of order and let the question come upon the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Arizona to ask unanimous consent to recur to the amendment on page 17, beginning with line 14. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent to withdraw the point of order which he made against the amendment and which was sustained. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The point of order is withdrawn, and, without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, under the heading "Utah," and after the items now in the bill under that heading, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To come after all the provisions in regard to Utah?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes, sir. In support of the amendment I desire to make a short statement.

This matter was referred to the Court of Claims. The court entered a judgment. Prior to the matter going to the court the amount due the Indians was drawing interest payable annually and was paid annually, but when it was merged into a judgment the comptroller held that he could not any longer pay interest except by direct authority of the Congress. This amendment is in part to cover that.

In connection with that it appears that a great many of these Indians have allotments upon which irrigation rights attach, subject to forfeiture if the improvements are not carried on. In addition to that it appears that many Indians require help in the matter of making improvements, getting stock, and so forth. So the department recommended an appropriation to cover this whole matter, to be used in the judgment and discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The SECRETARY. On page 64, after line 8, it is proposed to insert:

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,305,257.19, being the net amount of a judgment rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, dated February 13, 1911, exclusive of the amount awarded for attorney's fee, pursuant to the provisions of the jurisdictional act approved March 3, 1909 (35 Stat. L., p. 788), the same to bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from and after the date of said judgment, the amount thereof and the interest accruing thereon to be available for cash payments to the Indians or for expenditures for their benefit, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior (Mar. 3, 1909).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, under the heading "Oklahoma," at the end of the provisions already in the bill under that heading, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Under the head of "Oklahoma," subhead "Five Civilized Tribes," on page 55, after line 3, it is proposed to insert:

For the purpose of reimbursing the trust funds of the Kickapoo Community in Mexico, said fund having been created under the provisions of the act of Congress of April 30, 1908 (35 Stat. L., 89), for legal expenses necessarily incurred in defending said community, its funds, lands, and members from fraud, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Okemah, who is now trustee of said community, the sum of $41,000, the same to be immediately available.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to hear that amendment explained. It is a private claim.

Mr. CLAPP. The explanation of the amendment is this: Some years ago these people had lands in Oklahoma. While it would take some time to go through the details of the litigation, these Indians were subjected to a great deal of expense that was unfair and unjust. They are now in Mexico, and in need not only of this item but the item of their lease money, which has not been paid them and which is due them. In order to clean up both matters, I have offered this amendment to reimburse them; and I desire to offer one directing the Indian Office to pay their lease money over to them.

Mr. LODGE. Does this money go to the Indians?

Mr. CLAPP. It goes to the Indians; yes, sir. I want to say that from all the information I have been able to get, those Indians, after they went down to Mexico, became a contented, satisfied band of Indians and, in the main, are doing well. I have made inquiries from time to time about them—of course, the evidence which I have is all hearsay—and I believe it was a blessing to those Indians that we allowed them to go down there. They have these two items left; and the purpose of this amendment is to clean up the matter, so that we may be through with it.

Mr. LODGE. I made the inquiry because of the statement I saw in one of the hearings—that of the $2,000 heretofore appropriated for the Kickapoos, I think, only $45 reached the Indians. The rest went in salaries.

Mr. CLAPP. That is too true with reference to their agency in Oklahoma. I have no hesitation in saying, from the evidence I have obtained in these matters, that those Indians are infinitely better off in Mexico and come much nearer getting a fair return for what is theirs and due them than they ever did while they were under the jurisdiction of our own Government.

Mr. LODGE. If this money goes to them, Mr. President, I have no objection to the appropriation; but I do think, in view of the appropriation of $2,000 for the benefit of the Kickapoo Indians, of which all but $45 was spent in the expense of distribution, that we ought to be careful to see that this money goes to the Indians.

Mr. CLAPP. So far as the law can safeguard it, this amendment provides that the money shall be paid over to them.

Mr. LODGE. I do not want it all absorbed in the salaries of agents.

Mr. CLAPP. No, sir; I am as anxious to avoid that as is the Senator.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. In addition to that, I am going to ask for the adoption of an amendment to pay over their lease money to them. I send the proposed amendment to the Secretary's desk.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just agreed to it is proposed to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to immediately cause to be deposited to the credit of the Indian owner in the First National Bank of Douglas, Ariz., all money known as lease money now on deposit with or in any manner under the control of the agents and officers of the Interior Department and all like money due or becoming due or collectible by them prior to the 1st day of January, 1914, and belonging to any of the Mexican Kickapoo Indians now resident in the Republic of Mexico. The receipt by such bank for any such money shall operate as the receipt of the Indian owner and as a complete release of all liability on the part of the officer paying the said money as herein directed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Now, Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. I regret I have no statement concerning it. It was handed me by the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN]. Perhaps it may be well to offer it and let it lie on the table until he returns.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, after line 9, it is proposed to insert the following:

For the construction of buildings for agency headquarters on the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation in Idaho, $30,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks that the amendment lie upon the table. Without objection, it will lie upon the table.

Mr. CLAPP. I now offer the amendment I send to the desk, and ask for the reading of the letter from the Interior Department in regard to it.

The SECRETARY. Under the head of "South Dakota," on page 62, after line 19, it is proposed to insert the following:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to A. C. Brink, of Pierre, S. Dak., the sum of $128.68 on account of repairs to a gas engine made while said engine was rented by him to the superintendent of the Pierre Indian school, and being used during September and October, 1911, in digging a test well for the purpose of securing a water supply for that school, and to charge said amount to the appropriation for Indian school, Pierre, S. Dak., water supply.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In that connection, the Secretary will read the letter from the Secretary of the Interior in relation thereto.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, June 24, 1912.

Hon. CHARLES H. BURKE,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Answering your letter of June 17, 1912, relative to claim in favor of A. C. Brink, I have the honor to advise you that the bill originally consisted of a charge of $50 for 10 days' rental of a gas engine, which amount was allowed by the Auditor for the Interior Department, and of $128.68 for repairs on the engine while it was being used by the Government. As the agreement for the rental of the engine did not expressly specify that the repairs should be made at the expense of the Government and as their necessity appears to have been due, in part, to the negligence of the Government employees, the auditor held, following the decision of the comptroller dated March 26, 1912, in case of the Oregon Short Line Railroad Co., that the damages were unliquidated and, therefore, were not of such a nature as the executive departments are authorized to settle. The amount of $128.68 was, therefore, disallowed by him.

Mr. Brink, the claimant, has a legal right to appeal to the Comptroller of the Treasury at any time within one year from the date of settlement, which was April 24, 1912.

However, as the statutory authorization suggested by you would probably be more effective in the settlement of his claim, an item has been prepared as requested and is transmitted herewith so that you may take such action as you consider proper in the matter. The office deems the charge a just one and recommends its payment.

Respectfully,

F. H. ABBOTT,
Acting Commissioner.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 43, at the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], we passed the item proposing to pay $5,000 to the estate of John W. West, beginning with line 1, going down to and including line 15. I desire to call up that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota moves to recur to page 43, lines 1 to 15, inclusive, the amendment which was temporarily passed over during the absence of the Senator from North Dakota. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The amendment is before the Senate. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. I simply asked that it be passed over because the Senator from North Dakota was not here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has now been recurred to. Does the Senator still ask that it be passed over?

Mr. CLAPP. No; I move the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, owing to the absence of some Senators there was an understanding that the bill would not be reported out of the committee to-day. Unless some Senator has an amendment he desires to offer I ask that the bill be laid aside until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, requested the Senate to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 25069) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The message also informed the Senate that the House of Representatives had elected JOSHUA W. ALEXANDER, a Representative from the State of Missouri, Speaker pro tempore during the temporary absence of the Speaker.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 331) extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under certain contingencies, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE) laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives for the return of the bill (H. R. 25069) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I understand that is a request for the recall of the sundry civil appropriation bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. LODGE. That bill has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and it is now under consideration by that committee. I should think the chairman of the committee should be consulted before any action is taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by one of the clerks at the desk that word was sent to the Senator from Wyoming, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and he said he had no objection to the granting of the request of the House.

Mr. LODGE. Then that is sufficient.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the House is complied with.

REGENT OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 94) providing for the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, in the class other than Members of Congress, which was, on page 1, line 6, after "Fairbanks," to insert "a citizen."

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 4 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, July 2, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 1, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Clerk of the House, Hon. South Trimble.

Dr. J. Lewenthal, rabbi, Vine Street Temple, Nashville, Tenn., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, may Thy loving kindness be upon us and establish Thou the works of our hands, yea, the work of our hands, firmly establish Thou it. We pray Thee to look down in Thy infinite kindness upon the Members of this House; be graciously inclined toward them and endow them with a good heart, with wisdom and understanding, and with a just and willing mind so that they may acquit themselves of and discharge their duties as fully as their hearts desire to do so. We thank Thee, O God, for the preservation of this great and glorious Republic, in its national integrity and unity, and humbly do we pray Thee for strength and courage that we may purge wherever it exists our citizen States of the deep causes of corruption which so often make sin profitable and uprightness hard. Do Thou grant unto our public men the faith and daring of the kingdom of God in their hearts so that they may enlist in the sacred warfare for the freedom and the rights of the people.

Into Thy keeping, O Father, do we commend the President of these United States and Members of this House and all the constituted authorities, so that through them order may be preserved and right and liberty be fostered. Do Thou strengthen the bonds of loyalty and friendship between all the inhabitants of our great country. Bless all mankind, Thy children, now and forevermore. Amen.

The Clerk read the following communication:

JULY 1, 1912.

HON. SOUTH TRIMBLE.
Clerk House of Representatives:

I hereby designate Hon. J. W. ALEXANDER, of Missouri, to preside over the House this day.

CHAMP CLARK, Speaker.

Mr. ALEXANDER assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore amid applause.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, June 27, 1912, was read and approved.

EXTENDING APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE NECESSARY OPERATIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT, ETC.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations I report back to the House joint resolution 331, extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under certain contingencies and ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 331) extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under certain contingencies.

Resolved, etc., That all appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government, and for the payment of pensions under existing laws, which shall remain unprovided for on the 30th day of June, 1912, be, and they are hereby, continued and made available for and during the month of July, 1912, unless the regular appropriations provided therefor in bills now pending in Congress shall have been previously made for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913; and a sufficient amount is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry on the same: Provided, That no greater amount shall be expended for such operations than as the sum of one-twelfth of the appropriations made for the fiscal year 1912 bears to the whole of the appropriations of said fiscal year: Provided further, That the total expenditures for the whole of the fiscal year 1913 under the several appropriations hereby continued, and under the several appropriation bills now pending, shall not exceed in the aggregate the amounts finally appropriated therefor in the several bills now pending, except in cases where a change is made in the annual, monthly, or per diem compensation or in the numbers of officers, clerks, or other persons authorized to be employed by the several appropriations hereby continued, in which cases the amounts authorized to be expended shall equal one-twelfth of the appropriations for the fiscal year 1912, and eleven-twelfths of the appropriations contained in the several bills now pending when the same shall have been finally passed, unless the salary or compensation of any office shall be increased or diminished without changing the grade or the duties thereof, in which case such salary or compensation shall relate to the entire fiscal year and run from the beginning thereof: And provided further, That the session employees of the Senate and House of Representatives now authorized by law shall be continued upon the rolls until the end of the present session of Congress and paid at the rate per diem or month at which they are now paid; and a sufficient amount is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to pay the same.

This joint resolution shall be construed as authorizing the continuance of the salaries and other expenses under the organization of the Bureau of the Census of the Department of Commerce and Labor as the latter existed June 30, 1912, for the period of time and under the conditions provided herein for all other branches of the public service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the House understands the necessity for this resolution. Nine of the regular appropriation bills have not yet become law. The only appropriation bills which have received the approval of the President are the fortifications bill, the diplomatic and consular bill, and the District of Columbia bill. In order to continue the operations of the Government it is necessary that some such resolution as this be passed. Under the law, except in certain excepted cases, no official of the Government is authorized to incur any liability without express authority, and all officials of the Government are prohibited from accepting any voluntary services except under penalty fixed by the law. This resolution is drawn on lines similar to the last one passed by Congress under similar conditions, the last one being in 1894. Joint resolutions were necessary to continue appropriations in 1876, 1882, 1884, 1886, 1888, 1890, and 1894. This resolution was prepared after a conference between the Comptroller of the Treasury and the Chief of the Division of Bookkeeping and Accounts in the Treasury Department and the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, whose long services and familiarity with these matters is known to the House and which makes him peculiarly competent to act in these respects. I shall ask that there may be printed as part of my remarks the report prepared to accompany the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The report is as follows:

[House Report No. 926, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

EXTENSION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FITZGERALD, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted the following report, to accompany House joint resolution 331:

The Committee on Appropriations report herewith a joint resolution extending the appropriations made for the necessary operations of the Government for the fiscal year 1912 during the month of July of the fiscal year 1913 and recommend its immediate passage.

The enactment of this resolution is made necessary because of the failure of final passage of nine of the annual appropriation bills before the beginning of the fiscal year 1913, namely, Agriculture, Army, Indian, legislative, Military Academy, naval, pension, Post Office, and sundry civil.

The Army bill for 1913 was passed by both Houses, but failed to become a law because of the veto by the President June 17, 1912.

The diplomatic and consular, District of Columbia, and fortification acts for the fiscal year 1913 have become laws.

Under the provisions of this measure sums equal to one-twelfth of the appropriations made for the necessary operations of the Government for 1912 are appropriated for the month of July of the fiscal year 1913, or the proportionate part of such sums for such part of July as shall elapse before the enactment of the respective appropriation acts for 1913; all amounts expended out of such sums to be deducted from the appropriations finally made for each purpose for the entire fiscal year 1913.

Joint resolutions or acts of a similar character, extending appropriations after the close of a fiscal year because of failure to pass the regular bills, were enacted in 1876, 1882, 1884, 1886, 1888, 1890, 1892, and 1894.

The accompanying joint resolution is in the exact terms of the one last passed by Congress, in 1894, providing for a similar condition to that now existing, except that the month of July is provided for instead of 30 days, and express provision is made for continuance of the Census Bureau; the latter is made necessary because existing law provides for the termination of the organization of that bureau on June 30, 1912. The reorganization of the bureau is provided for in the legislative, etc., act for 1913, but until the latter becomes a law it is necessary to thus provide expressly for a continuance of the old organization.

The month of July is specified as the extreme period of time covered by the proposed extension of appropriations instead of 30 days, in order to avoid possible complications that may arise in settling salary or pay accounts under the provisions of the act of June 30, 1906, requiring that in making payments all annual salaries shall be divided into 12 equal parts, and each of such parts into 30 equal portions, or computing 360 days as a year and 30 days as constituting each month.

The accompanying memoranda, compiled from the laws and from the records of Congress, are submitted for the further information of the House:

CONTINUANCE OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Forty-fourth Congress: The first session of this Congress extended until August 15, 1876, or 46 days beyond the fiscal year 1876.

Act of June 30, 1876, made unexpended balances available for 10 days and, to the extent they might be insufficient, made an indefinite appropriation for the necessary service of the Government, all sums expended to be charged to and deducted from the appropriations for 1877 (Stat. L., vol. 19, p. 65).

Further continued for 10 days by act July 10, 1876 (Stat. L., vol. 19, p. 78).

Further continued until August 10, 1876, by act August 1, 1876 (Stat. L., vol. 19, p. 122).

Further continued until August 14, 1876, by act August 12, 1876 (Stat. L., vol. 19, p. 131).

No specific service or object was mentioned or specially provided for except the public printing, which was authorized to be continued in advance of appropriations to be made therefor.

The Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses did not extend their regular sessions beyond the fiscal years 1878 and 1880, respectively.

Forty-seventh Congress: The first session of this Congress extended until August 8, 1882, or 39 days beyond the fiscal year 1882.

Joint resolution June 30, 1882, continued appropriations of 1882 for 20 days and, when insufficient, indefinite amount appropriated to carry on necessary operations of Government; amounts expended to be deducted from regular appropriations when made. (Stat. L., vol. 22, p. 384.)

Further continued until July 31, 1882, by joint resolution July 20, 1882 (Stat. L., vol. 22, p. 384).

Further continued until August 5, 1882, by joint resolution August 5, 1882 (Stat. L., vol. 22, p. 390).

No particular service or object was mentioned or specifically provided for except authority was granted for continuing, during the periods stated, public printing and binding and "miscellaneous objects embodied in the sundry civil and naval appropriation acts in advance of appropriations to be hereafter made for said objects."

The sundry civil act was not approved at this session until August 7, 1882, or two days after expiration of continuance of appropriations.

Forty-eighth Congress: The first session of this Congress extended until July 7, 1884, or seven days beyond the fiscal year 1884.

Joint resolution June 30, 1884, continued appropriations for 1884 for five days, and when insufficient, indefinite amount appropriated to carry on necessary operations of Government, amounts expended to be deducted from regular appropriations when made. (Stat. L., vol. 23, p. 276.)

No particular service or object was mentioned or specifically provided for, except authority was granted for continuing, during the periods stated, public printing and binding and "miscellaneous objects embodied in the sundry civil and naval appropriation acts in advance of appropriations to be hereafter made for said objects."

The sundry civil, legislative, and diplomatic and consular acts were not approved at this session until July 7, 1884, or two days after expiration of continuance of appropriations.

The regular naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1885 failed of enactment, and on July 7, 1884, a joint resolution was approved providing for the naval service for six months on the basis of the appropriations for the fiscal year 1884.

Forty-ninth Congress: The first session of this Congress extended until August 5, 1886, or 36 days beyond the fiscal year 1886.

Joint resolution July 1, 1886, contained appropriations for 1886 for 15 days, and when insufficient, indefinite amounts appropriated to carry on necessary operations of Government, amounts expended to be deducted from regular appropriations when made. (Stat. L., vol. 24, p. 343.)

No particular service or object was mentioned or specifically provided for, except authority was given for continuing, during the period stated, public printing and binding and "miscellaneous objects embodied in the sundry civil and naval appropriation acts in advance of appropriations to be hereafter made for said objects."

The sundry civil act was not approved at this session until August 4, 1886, or four days after expiration of continuance of appropriations.

Fiftieth Congress: The first session of this Congress extended until October 20, 1888, or 112 days beyond the fiscal year 1888.

Joint resolution June 30, 1888, continued appropriations for 1888 for 30 days, and when insufficient, indefinite amount appropriated to carry on necessary operations of Government, amounts expended to be deducted from regular appropriations when made. (Stat. L., vol. 25, p. 624.)

Further continued until September 15, 1888, by joint resolution September 1, 1888. (Stat. L., vol. 25, p. 630.)
Further continued until October 10, 1888, by joint resolution September 26, 1888. (Stat. L., vol. 25, p. 631.)
No particular service or object was mentioned or specifically provided for except authority was granted for continuing, during the period stated, public printing and binding and "miscellaneous objects embodied in the sundry civil, Army, District of Columbia, legislative, executive, and judicial, and naval appropriation acts in advance of appropriations to be hereafter made for said objects."
Fifty-first Congress: The first session of this Congress extended until October 1, 1890, or 93 days beyond the fiscal year 1890.
Joint resolution June 30, 1890, continued appropriations for 1890 for 30 days; terms used identical with those of proposed continuance of 1912 appropriations, except the last paragraph of latter, as to census, etc. (Stat. L., vol. 26, p. 675.)
Further continued until August 14, 1890, by joint resolution July 30, 1890. (Stat. L., vol. 26, p. 677.)
Further continued until August 29, 1890, by joint resolution August 14, 1890. (Stat. L., vol. 26, p. 677.)
No particular service or object was mentioned or specifically provided for, although only the Military Academy, Navy, pension, and Post Office acts were approved prior to July 1, 1890.
Fifty-second Congress: The first session of this Congress extended until August 5, 1892, or 36 days beyond the fiscal year 1892.
Joint resolution June 30, 1892, continued appropriations for 1892 for 15 days. Terms used identical with those of proposed continuance of 1912 appropriations, except the last paragraph of latter as to census, etc. (Stat. L., vol. 27, p. 397.)
Further continued until July 30, 1892, by joint resolution July 15, 1892. (Stat. L., vol. 27, p. 398.)
Further continued until August 4, 1892, by joint resolution August 1, 1892. (Stat. L., vol. 27, p. 401.)
No particular service or object was mentioned or specifically provided for except the District of Columbia "and for the payment of pensions."
Fifty-third Congress: The first regular session of this Congress extended until August 28, 1894, or 59 days beyond the fiscal year 1894.
Joint resolution June 29, 1894, continued appropriations for 1894 for 30 days. Terms used identical with those of proposed continuance of 1912, except the last paragraph of latter as to census, etc. (Stat. L., vol. 28, p. 585.)
Further continued until August 14, 1894, by joint resolution July 31, 1894. (Stat. L., vol. 28, p. 587.)
No particular service or object was mentioned or specifically provided for except the District of Columbia "and for the payment of pensions."
In addition to the foregoing general continuance of all appropriations a joint resolution was enacted July 9, 1894, making an indefinite appropriation "to continue until the 31st day of July, 1894, the employment of mechanics and laborers paid from the appropriation 'Increase of the Navy, construction and machinery,'" the amount so expended to be deducted from the amount finally appropriated for that purpose for 1895. (Stat. L., vol. 28, p. 587.)
The naval act for 1895 was approved July 26, 1894.

(Twelve in all.)

APPROPRIATION ACTS APPROVED AFTER CLOSE OF FISCAL YEARS WHEN PROVISION FOR CONTINUANCE OF APPROPRIATIONS WAS NOT MADE.

Fifty-fifth Congress (fiscal year 1899): Indian, July 1, 1898; sundry civil, July 1, 1898.
Fifty-seventh Congress (fiscal year 1903): District of Columbia, July 1, 1902; Navy, July 1, 1902.
Sixty-second Congress (fiscal year 1913). The following bills have not yet become laws: Agriculture, Army, Indian, legislative, etc., Military Academy, naval, pension, Post Office, sundry civil (nine in all).
The following have been approved: Diplomatic and consular, District of Columbia, fortification.
The Army bill, having passed both Houses, was vetoed by the President June 17, 1912.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.
Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.
Mr. FINLEY. Does the gentleman think it will be necessary to pass another resolution similar to this before the appropriation bills or the money bills generally are passed by Congress and sent to the President in the usual form?
Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I have not thought about the matter at all. I have no impression——
Mr. FINLEY. The necessity for this resolution is unusual, and has the gentleman any particular views and reasons to give——
Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is as familiar with the situation as I am.
Mr. FINLEY. Well, it is a political situation, is it not?
Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I know the House passed the appropriation bills, and because of the fact that the two great national conventions were to be held in the month of June after the 15th the Senate made an agreement that no business should be transacted in the Senate between the 17th of June and the 1st of July, which was done to accommodate, apparently, members of both political parties, and had it not been for the two conventions I know of no reason that would have prevented all the appropriation bills having been acted upon prior to the termination of the last fiscal year.
Mr. FINLEY. I call attention to the fact that the Post Office bill has been in the Senate for about two months and has not been reported out of committee yet.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Of course, the gentleman realizes I am not responsible——
Mr. FINLEY. I am sure of that——
Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). For what happens or what does not happen in the Senate.
Mr. FINLEY. I am sure of that.
Mr. FITZGERALD. But we have the situation to face. This resolution is to do what has been done under similar conditions in the past.
Mr. RODDENBERY. Reserving the right to object——
Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand it is too late for gentlemen to object or reserve the right to object. I understand consent has been given, and we are debating the resolution, but I do not think any gentleman wishes to object. It is an unusual situation.
Mr. RODDENBERY. The resolution as prepared does not provide that the abolition of positions made in the House bill shall not be covered by this provision.
Mr. FITZGERALD. It does not. The gentleman understands that the two Houses apparently are in disagreement over a great many items. If the House should propose to appropriate only in accordance with its action taken on the appropriation bill, the Senate very likely would insist on the appropriations being made in accordance with its desires, and we could do nothing.
Mr. RODDENBERY. We would like to carry out these economies in our bills but for that objection.
Mr. FITZGERALD. We hope before this session is ended to enact the appropriation bills and have as many unnecessary and useless offices abolished as possible, and have as many reductions as possible in the appropriations for the present fiscal year.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the resolution.
The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and agreed to.
On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

RETURN OF SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.
The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 591.

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to request the Senate to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 25069) entitled "An act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
Mr. FITZGERALD. The purpose is, Mr. Speaker, to have corrected an error that was made in the enrollment of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

ENCAMPMENT AND MANEUVERS OF ORGANIZED MILITIA.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to offer the following House joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 332) appropriating $1,350,000 for encampment and maneuvers for the Organized Militia.

Be it resolved, etc., That the sum of $1,350,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for paying the expenses of the Organized Militia of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia which may be authorized by the Secretary of War to participate in such encampment as may be established or the field instruction of the troops of the Regular Army, as provided by section 1521 of the act of January 21, 1903, entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes," to be immediately available.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. In the House as in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HAY. In the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, the resolution which I have just reported by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs is made for the reason that the Army appropriation bill, which passed both Houses, was vetoed by the President, and therefore these encampments can not be had unless this appropriation is now made.

I desire to say, however, that I do not propose to treat any other appropriation in the Army bill in this way, nor would I have been in favor of making this appropriation now had it not been for the fact that the States in good faith had prepared themselves for these maneuvers and had spent large sums in order to carry them out.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. How much does the resolution carry?

Mr. HAY. One million three hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. MANN. That does not include, I take it, the amount that was suggested by the passage of the bill for the Regular Army?

Mr. HAY. It does not.

Mr. MANN. Is not that necessary?

Mr. HAY. I think not. I think under the continuing resolution just passed the War Department can use for the purpose of these maneuvers, if it desires to do so, that part of the appropriation which provides for transportation and subsistence.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has given careful attention to the subject. My recollection of the President's message, which was read the other day, is that it indicated that these maneuvers would require a considerable increase of expense in the Regular Army.

Mr. HAY. No. It required only the usual appropriation. The proposition of the President was that we appropriate for this purpose for the Regular Army $367,000. But the appropriation which was carried for the last fiscal year was not increased by reason of the maneuvers. For instance, the appropriation for transportation or for subsistence or for regular supplies in the Quartermaster's Department is not increased by reason of the maneuvers.

Mr. MANN. The reason I asked the question, of course, was this: The joint resolution which we just passed confines the expenditure for this month to one-twelfth of the appropriation of the last fiscal year. I did not know but that the maneuvers might require an additional expenditure in connection with the maneuvers and the other business of the Army greater than the one-twelfth.

Mr. HAY. I think not. I think that one-twelfth of the appropriation of last year, for instance, for transportation will be ample to take care of these maneuvers.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. HAY. I do.

Mr. KAHN. The appropriation for last year, as carried in the bill, was for $350,000 for maneuvers?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. And therefore this amount carried in the resolution is absolutely necessary if the maneuvers are conducted on the large scale that is contemplated?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 25531) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed. (H. Rept. 927.)

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order against the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] reserves all points of order against the bill.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to give us five legislative days in which to file the views of the minority.

Mr. HAY. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that.

Mr. PRINCE. I do not want to delay the consideration of the bill at all.

Mr. HAY. I am anxious to get this bill through as soon as possible. If the gentleman asks consent to file his report within five legislative days and, notwithstanding that consent, I am allowed to bring it up at any time, I have no objection.

Mr. PRINCE. Of course, I am perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman if he expects to get the Army bill before the House to-morrow?

Mr. HAY. I desire to do so, and if I can agree with the gentleman I would like to pass it to-day under the suspension of the rules.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to say, if the gentleman from Virginia will yield, that this bill is the same as the bill which passed the House some time ago. Of course, in the end the differences must be agreed upon in conference. We are anxious to expedite the public business and get these supply bills out of the way. If agreeable to the gentlemen on the other side, inasmuch as the bill has already been passed by the House and does not contain those particular items on account of which the President vetoed the bill, I think it would be well in the way of expediting business to send the bill to the Senate, because, of course, the majority on this side will pass it ultimately, and let the Senate disagree and send it to conference, and then the House can act on the conference report when it comes back here. If that is agreeable to gentlemen on the other side, I think it is the wise thing to do.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I take it that this side of the House would make no obstruction to the passage of the bill, but we voted against it when it was passed before. The gentleman could hardly expect us to vote for it in the same form that it is now presented.

Mr. HAY. We do not expect the gentleman to vote for it.

Mr. MANN. That might be required under a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois, in the way of expediting this business and disposing of the bill, if it would be agreeable to that side of the House to give unanimous consent that it may be considered this morning and passed without debate. Of course, that can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think there is some desire to have a little discussion of the bill. I understand that it is the purpose to go ahead with the Unanimous Consent Calendar to-day. I do not believe there will be any objection to taking the bill up to-morrow.

Mr. PRINCE. None whatever.

Mr. HAY. Under a rule?

Mr. MANN. Under a rule or under some unanimous-consent agreement. Let the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] and my colleague from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] get together and agree upon some procedure.

Mr. HAY. Then I will make this request: That to-morrow morning, immediately after the reading of the Journal this bill be taken up, and that general debate be had upon it for one hour on a side, at the end of which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered, and a vote taken upon the final passage of the bill.

Mr. MANN. The bill to be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HAY. Yes. General debate to be limited to two hours—one hour on a side; at the end of which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered, and the vote taken on the final passage of the bill.

Mr. MANN. We might want a ruling on some points of order on the bill.

Mr. HAY. Those points of order have been already ruled upon.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman would have no trouble in reaching an agreement to-morrow substantially like that suggested.

Mr. HAY. I do not see why we can not reach it now, because we can bring in a rule in exactly those terms.

Mr. MANN. Oh, certainly.

Mr. HAY. But I do not want to ask for that unless it becomes necessary.

Mr. MANN. Let the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from Illinois get together. I think there would be no difficulty in agreeing on the terms upon which the bill should be brought in.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Virginia that the House to-day will take up for consideration the Unanimous Consent Calendar and probably run for an hour or two, and that they could go ahead and reach some agreement before adjournment to-day for taking up the military appropriation bill.

Mr. HAY. And that is what I am asking.

Mr. PRINCE. I understood the gentleman wanted to bring it up to-day.

Mr. HAY. Oh, no; I made no such proposition.

Mr. PRINCE. I am perfectly willing to bring this matter up to-morrow morning and dispose of it. We have no desire to obstruct in the slightest degree the public business, but I am inclined to think, from memory now, that there are some points of order that I may want to make—not the same points that I made before, for those have been already passed upon; but the matter will only take an hour on a side and we will expedite it as rapidly as possible.

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman that all points of order were made upon the bill when it passed the House before and they were all ruled upon.

Mr. PRINCE. Possibly all of them, but there may be one or two that were not.

Mr. HAY. Under the agreement which I propose it would be impossible to get at points of order, because I propose that after the general debate the previous question shall be ordered.

Mr. CANNON. But the points of order would lie.

Mr. HAY. You can not make points of order except under the five-minute rule, as I understand it.

Mr. MANN. I would suggest to the gentleman he would have difficulty about that, because the ordering of the previous question would not prevent a point of order being made when the bill was read, and the waiving of the reading of the bill could only be done by unanimous consent or under a rule.

Mr. HAY. Of course.

Mr. MANN. And I do not think the gentleman would desire to bring in a rule to that extent, except by unanimous consent. I do not think there will be any trouble about the matter to-morrow.

Mr. HAY. Very well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] asks unanimous consent to have five legislative days in which to file the views of the minority on the military appropriation bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

DAM ACROSS WHITE RIVER, ARK.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the bill (H. R. 20347) to authorize the Dixey Power Co. to construct a dam across White River at or near Cotter, Ark., with Senate amendments thereto.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. ADAMSON, Mr. RICHARDSON, and Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota.

HON. CHAMP CLARK.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The clerk read as follows:

House resolution 592.

Resolved, That the Members of this House, regardless of politics, express their full confidence in the honor, integrity, and patriotism of the presiding officer of this House, the Hon. CHAMP CLARK.

[Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL—EXTENDING REMARKS.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD remarks upon H. R. 25069, the sundry civil appropriation bill, in relation to the public-land offices and the receivers, upon that portion of the bill to be found on page 93, from lines 1 to 25, and on pages 94 and 95; and to insert also in the RECORD certain letters and telegrams from public-land States in relation to the office of receiver.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject referred to?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is the day set aside for the consideration of business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, and the Clerk will report the first bill.

EXCHANGE OF SCHOOL LANDS.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 19344) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange lands for school sections within an Indian, military, national forest, or other reservation, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I thought possibly the gentleman from California was going to make a request, but if he is not I shall object.

Mr. RAKER. Well, the only request to be made is that the House take up the bill and pass it.

Mr. MANN. All right, then I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

CONFLICT BETWEEN PLACER AND LODE LOCATORS OF PHOSPHATE LANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8883) providing for adjustment of conflict between placer and lode locators of phosphate lands.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I had intended to ask unanimous consent that the bill should go over.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I rose for the purpose of asking unanimous consent that the bill just read go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois waive his objection?

Mr. FOSTER. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SALE AND DISPOSITION OF THE SURPLUS AND UNALLOTTED LANDS IN THE STANDING ROCK INDIAN RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 109) to authorize the sale and disposition of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Standing Rock Indian Reservation in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry same into effect.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] is interested in this bill and has been suddenly called out of town, and asked that this bill might be passed over, and therefore I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

REGULATION OF RADIO COMMUNICATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 6412) to regulate radio communication.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. BARTLETT. What is the calendar number?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House Calendar number is 243 and the Unanimous Consent Calendar number is 262.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, that bill is not at the proper place on the calendar, and I think I can explain it. We had a House bill on the calendar, but this bill was placed on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and it was understood when the matter came up in the House that the Senate bill should be substituted for the House bill, and I think that was done on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMS). The House Calendar number of the bill is 243, and the number for Unanimous Consent is 262.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object——

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, the bill has been read heretofore.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman desire to have this bill go over again for a couple of weeks?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It just depends upon the attitude of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman I am trying to work somewhat on this bill, and I am not satisfied that it be passed to-day by unanimous consent.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may go over without prejudice to the next calendar consent day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SALE AND ENTRY OF CERTAIN LANDS IN OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 22647) providing for the sale and entry of certain lands in the State of Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—I do not see the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] present.

Mr. FOSTER. Let it go over.

Mr. MANN. All right. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

RENOVATED AND ADULTERATED BUTTER.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 24828) to amend the law relative to manufacture and sale of process or renovated or adulterated butter.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, the bill has already been read once. I ask unanimous consent that it be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill that has just been reported?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. It is understood it is passed over without prejudice?

Mr. MANN. And not as having passed the House.

Mr. BUTLER. And not having passed the House.

LANDS FOR HOMESTEAD ENTRY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 22090) to subject the lands of the former Fort Niobrara Military Reservation and other lands in Nebraska to homestead entry.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LANDS IN COLVILLE INDIAN RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 338) authorizing the sale of certain lands in the Colville Indian Reservation to the town of Okanogan, State of Washington, for public park purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted and conveyed, for public park purposes, to the town of Okanogan, county of Okanogan, State of Washington, a municipal corporation, the following-described lands, or so much thereof as said town may desire, to wit: All that portion of lot 8 of section 17, township 23 north, range 26 east of the Willamette meridian, containing 47.35 acres.

SEC. 2. That the said conveyance shall be made of the said lands to the said town by the Secretary of the Interior upon the payment by the said town for the said lands, or such portion thereof as it may select, of such sum as may be fixed by the appraisement hereafter to be made under the act entitled "An act to authorize the sale and disposition of surplus or unallotted lands of the diminished Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1906, and patent issued to the said town for the said lands selected, to have and to hold for public park purposes, subject to the existing laws and regulations concerning public parks, and that the grant hereby made shall not include any lands which at the date of the issuance of patent shall be covered by a valid, existing, bona fide right or claim initiated under the laws of the United States: Provided, That the said town shall not have the right to sell or convey the lands herein granted, or any parts thereof, or to devote the same to any other purpose than as hereinbefore described, and that if the said lands shall not be used as public parks the same, or such parts thereof not so used, shall revert to the United States: And provided further, That the lands conveyed to the town of Okanogan, as authorized herein, shall be subject for a period of 25 years to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object if nobody desires to be heard on it.

MEDALS OF HONOR TO CAPTAIN, OFFICERS, AND CREW OF THE CARPATHIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 306) to provide for the award of medals of honor to the captain, officers, and crew of the Cunard steamship Carpathia.

Mr. MANN. The bill was read before, and I reserve the right to object.

Mr. ADAMSON. There is another resolution for a similar purpose, which has been passed by the Senate and is now on the calendar—Senate joint resolution 111. By some means, or for some reason, or without a reason—I do not know which—these bills were sent to different committees, and both committees have reported them promptly. I have conferred with the author of this House joint resolution, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FRANCIS], and he thinks it would expedite the completion of legislation and serve substantially the same purpose if we should consider the Senate joint resolution in lieu of this. He has requested me to ask unanimous consent, first, that we take the matter up in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and then request that the Senate joint resolution, reported by the other committee, be taken up and considered in lieu of this.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Well, that is going a good deal, to ask the House to go into Committee of the Whole when the resolution is not on the calendar.

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes; it is on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman wish to pass it informally?

Mr. ADAMSON. Until we reach the other, and then I desire to make the request that I have indicated.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] that one of these bills provides for the thanks of Congress and the other provides for medals to the captain of the Carpathia and crew, and so forth. I am not willing to pass at this time by unanimous consent both of the bills. As the gentleman who now occupies the chair by designation is the chairman of the committee that reported one of the bills, I do not wish to take any advantage of him while he is in the chair. If the gentleman wants to pass this without prejudice, it is all right; otherwise, I shall object.

Mr. ADAMSON. The object is to facilitate legislation. The author of this bill will be as well satisfied to pass the Senate bill, because he will secure legislation more quickly. My idea is that this bill should be passed without prejudice until we reach the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON]?

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. ADAMSON. With pleasure.

Mr. ANTHONY. What does the Senate bill propose to do?

Mr. ADAMSON. It proposes to extend the thanks of Congress.

Mr. ANTHONY. But it does not decorate every member of the crew with a medal?

Mr. ADAMSON. No, I think not; although I have not analyzed that thoroughly.

Mr. MANN. The bill extends the thanks of Congress by name to the captain and to the balance of the crew by general language.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think that would be preposterous, because I think it would be impossible to decorate the entire crew.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Do the thanks of Congress carry with them the right or privilege to the floor of Congress?

Mr. ADAMSON. I so understand.

Mr. MANN. What is the request of the gentleman?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That the bill be laid over informally until the Senate bill is reached. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AMERICAN REGISTER FOR THE STEAMER "OCEANA."

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5207) to provide an American register for the steamer Oceana.

The bill was read.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, that bill has been read heretofore.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] objects.

OBSERVANCE OF MEMORIAL DAY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 321) relative to observance of Memorial Day.

The House joint resolution was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to the fact that the same resolution is over on page 40, No. 278.

Mr. MANN. It was stricken from the calendar at this place, and ought to have gone off the calendar here.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is on page 40 of the calendar here.

Mr. MANN. It was stricken from its place on the calendar, and it appears here by an error of the Clerk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has just stated that it is through an error on the part of the calendar clerk that the bill appears at this place. He says that it was stricken from the calendar on last unanimous consent day and that it appears——

Mr. BARTLETT. And that it appears in another place——

Mr. GARNER. And that it appears in another place, after it was stricken from the calendar.

Mr. MANN. It was stricken from the calendar on the last unanimous consent day, and placed on the calendar the same day. The Clerk in making up the calendar placed it in both places.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair that that is correct. It is an error that it appears in its present place on the calendar. Without objection, it will be stricken from the calendar——

Mr. BARTLETT. At this place——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. At this place.

There was no objection.

RIGHT OF WAY FOR ELECTRIC RAILROAD ACROSS VANCOUVER MILITARY RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4663) granting to the Washington-Oregon Corporation a right for an electric railroad, and for telephone, telegraph, and electric-transmission lines across the Vancouver Military Reservation, in the State of Washington.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the Washington-Oregon Corporation, a corporation organized under the law of the State of Washington, under the conditions and restrictions in this act contained, the right to extend, maintain, and operate its electric railway across the Vancouver Military Reservation, in the county of Clarke, in the State of Washington, with the right to construct, maintain, and operate telegraph, telephone, and electric-power transmission lines, the said grant to remain in force during the pleasure of Congress.

SEC. 2. That the works herein authorized shall be constructed upon such location as may be fixed by the Secretary of War, and in such manner, of such character, and with such spurs, switches, and crossings as he may prescribe; and said works shall be maintained and operated subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War or the commander at the said post may from time to time prescribe: Provided, That before beginning construction the said corporation shall furnish a bond to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War, conditioned for the completion of the said railroad and other works mentioned herein across said reservation within one year from the approval of said bond by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 3. That any other person or corporation having a franchise for the operation of a street railway in the city of Vancouver, in the State of Washington, including any electric railway as may have authority to do a suburban and interurban business, may, upon obtaining a license from the Secretary of War, use the track and other constructions herein authorized to be placed upon the reservation upon paying just compensation; and if the parties concerned can not agree upon the amount of such compensation, the sum or sums to be paid for said use shall be fixed by the Secretary of War: Provided, That if said right of way is located over any land which the public is using, or may hereafter use, as a public highway, the uses herein authorized shall not exclude such public use: And provided further, That the said corporation shall surface the said roadway for a width of 24 feet alongside and exclusive of the said railway tracks for the entire distance occupied by said tracks within the reservation, with crushed rock of suitable size, the said roadway to be properly oiled and rolled, and shall maintain the same, including the space between the tracks, at all times in good condition for vehicle traffic; shall keep the said track or roadway within the reservation limits properly lighted by satisfactory electric light without expense to the United States; and shall construct and maintain a suitable drainage ditch along said track.

SEC. 4. That if any portion of the said reservation occupied by the works herein authorized shall cease to be used for some one of the purposes aforesaid, the same shall revert to the United States; and the said corporation, its successors or assigns, shall thereupon restore the premises to good condition, as required by the post commander.

SEC. 5. That the said corporation may be required at all times to improve and maintain its tracks and the spaces between them in good condition for traffic in conformity with the streets or public roadway over which they are laid.

SEC. 6. That the Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the bill grants to the Washington-Oregon Corporation the right for an electric railroad across a military reservation. There seems to be no report from the War Department shown in the report of the House committee on the bill. I sent and got the report of the Senate committee on the bill, and there is no information contained in that at all. I suggest to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WARBURTON] that we are entitled to have a report from the War Department. The House report says that the War Department has made a thorough investigation of the subject matter of the bill and has recommended to the Committee on Military Affairs the granting of a franchise instead of the grant recommended. We are entitled to have that report, if a report has been made.

Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill had been drawn as a matter of fact and submitted to the War Department before it was introduced by Senator JONES in the Senate. It was referred to the War Department and a favorable report made upon it. I can not explain why the report is not here, but a report was made before the committee when it had this bill up for consideration.

Mr. MANN. The committee did have a report from the War Department on this bill when it recommended favorable action on the bill?

Mr. WARBURTON. It did.

Mr. MANN. Then I shall not object. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

AMERICAN REGISTRY FOR THE STEAMER "DAMARA."

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 22907) to provide American registry for the steamer Damara.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been read heretofore, and, in the absence of my colleague, Mr. POST, who is in the hospital, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] asks unanimous consent that this bill go over to the next Unanimous Consent Calendar day. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. It is to be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes; to be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, that will be done.

There was no objection.

PATENT TO ENTRYMEN FOR HOMESTEADS UPON RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5545) providing for the issuing of patent to entrymen for homesteads upon reclamation projects.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think this bill was read before. I will ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice, in the absence of a number of gentlemen.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the bill S. 5445 be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AMERICAN HOSPITAL OF PARIS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 6380) to incorporate the American Hospital of Paris.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That John H. Harjes, John J. Hoff, H. H. Harjes, Henry Cachard, S. F. B. Biddle, W. S. Dalliba, Dr. Edmund L. Gros,

Leopold Huffer, Dr. A. J. Magnin, Frank H. Mason, J. Pierpont Morgan, F. W. Sharon, H. A. van Bergen, Dr. Crosby Whitman, and such persons as shall or may hereafter associate with them and in such manner and upon such terms as shall be specified in the by-laws of this corporation, are hereby ordained, constituted, and declared a body corporate in fact and in name in the District of Columbia, by the name and style of the American Hospital of Paris.

SEC. 2. That the said corporation is authorized to take by purchase, gift, grant, devise, and bequest, and to hold, mortgage, lease, transfer, and convey, for the purposes of the said corporation, any real and personal property in the United States of America and in France as may be deemed necessary for the wants or development of the corporation or any of them.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the design and purpose of said corporation to establish, maintain, and conduct in the city of Paris, Republic of France, or in its vicinity, a hospital to furnish, gratuitously or otherwise, medical and surgical aid and care to the citizens of the United States of America, and it shall be lawful for the said corporation to demand and receive a reasonable compensation for such care, sustenance, professional treatment, and other services; and all moneys so received shall be applied to the uses and benefits of the said corporation.

SEC. 4. That the direction and management of the affairs of the said corporation shall be vested in a board of governors composed of not less than 12 nor more than 20 members. The principal office of the corporation shall be located in the District of Columbia, but offices may be maintained and the meetings of the board of governors and committees held elsewhere.

SEC. 5. That the following persons shall, until the first annual election, be held to constitute the first board of governors: John H. Harjes, John J. Hoff, H. H. Harjes, Henry Cachard, S. F. B. Biddle, W. S. Dalliba, Dr. Edmund L. Gros, L. Huffer, Dr. A. J. Magnin, Frank H. Mason, J. Pierpont Morgan, F. W. Sharon, H. A. van Bergen, and Dr. Crosby Whitman. In case any of the above-named persons shall decline to serve or be ineligible, the vacancy or vacancies may be filled by the remaining governors, and any governor shall be eligible for reelection.

SEC. 6. That as soon as practicable after the passage of this act the said board shall organize and shall, by ballot, elect from the members of the board a president, a vice president, a secretary, and a treasurer, who shall hold their respective offices until the annual meeting in the year 1913. At such meeting for organization the said board shall by lot divide into three classes of equal numbers. The term of office of the first class shall continue until the annual meeting in the year 1914; that of the second class until the annual meeting in the year 1915; and that of the third class until the annual meeting in the year 1916. At the expiration of the term of each class as aforesaid, an equal number of governors shall be elected by said corporation at its annual meeting to fill the same, who shall hold office for the term of three years then next ensuing or until their successors shall be chosen. And at each succeeding annual election thereafter an equal number of members of said board of governors shall be so elected for said term to fill the class then becoming vacant as aforesaid.

SEC. 7. That the said board of governors shall have power to conduct and manage all the business and concerns of the said corporation; to fill, until the next annual election thereafter, any vacancy in the board occasioned by death, resignation, or otherwise; and to appoint such attending and resident physicians and surgeons, agents, assistants, and attendants as may be necessary; to fix their compensation, and to discharge them; to make such by-laws as may be necessary and proper and not contrary to law relative to elections and meetings, the qualifications and duties of governors and officers, the admission and qualifications of members, the management and disposition of the estate, business, and concerns of the said corporation, and to alter or to amend the same.

SEC. 8. That five governors shall be a quorum for the transaction of all business, except the sale or alienation of any of the real or personal estate of the said corporation, or the leasing of any real estate thereof for a longer term than one year, for which purposes or any of them the consent of a majority of the said board shall be necessary.

SEC. 9. That the property, real and personal, of said corporation shall be exempt from taxation.

SEC. 10. That this act shall be subject to alterations, amendment, or repeal.

SEC. 11. That this act shall take effect immediately.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and in doing so I will say I have no objection to the purposes for which it is indicated that this incorporation is sought. I may not be familiar with the fundamental law of this land, but I do not now recall, nor do I believe that anyone here can suggest, any provision of the Constitution of the United States under which authority can be exercised to incorporate this proposed body corporate.

Mr. MANN. It is done in similar cases in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am aware of the fact that the District of Columbia has a law by which corporations of this kind can be incorporated. But Congress having provided by law in the District Code and by acts of Congress the means by which all corporations that desire to be incorporated under the law may do so, I do not see how an incorporation of this kind can be authorized.

The bill provides that the principal office of the corporation shall be located in the District of Columbia, but that offices may be maintained and the meetings of the board of governors and committees held elsewhere. This is a bill to incorporate the "American Hospital of Paris," and under section 3 it is provided that it shall be the design and purpose of said corporation to establish, maintain, and conduct in the city of Paris, Republic of France, or in its vicinity, a hospital to furnish, gratuitously or otherwise, medical and surgical aid and care to the citizens of the United States of America. And further—and it shall be lawful for the said corporation to demand and receive a reasonable compensation for such care, sustenance, professional treatment, and other services; and all moneys so received shall be applied to the uses and benefits of the said corporation.

Mr. Speaker, when bills of this character have been before the House on previous occasions, when I have been present, I have been opposed to their passage, and have voted against them, even in the case of the incorporation of the Red Cross Society, or extending its incorporation, which is an institution that commends itself to everybody. I have always called attention to the fact that Congress, in my judgment, has not the power under the Constitution to create these charters, and I so believe with reference to this. I shall not go over the ground and call attention again to the adjudications of the court, commencing with the case of McCulloch v. Maryland and other decisions which I might quote, but in all the cases, even in modern cases, no suggestion has ever been made that Congress had the power or authority to incorporate corporations except those to carry out and perform some governmental function, as in the case of the United States Bank, or to incorporate a railroad engaged in interstate commerce and traversing the public lands of the United States, which were to be sold and the value of them increased thereby and to open up the land, or, as in the bridge case, to span navigable rivers and thereby aid interstate commerce. The courts have never yet, and I apprehend never will, say that Congress exercising its sovereign power has inherent authority to incorporate any sort of corporation, and I call attention to this bill which seeks to incorporate a corporation for the establishment of a hospital to be located in Paris and for certain business and charitable purposes. I have never thought that Congress had the power to enact this sort of law and pass this kind of a bill.

But this particular bill, Mr. Speaker, has some objections to which attention ought to be called, some defects, in my judgment. In the first place, we do not put any limitation upon the life of the corporation. We do reserve the right to amend or repeal the law, but it is unlimited so far as its life is concerned, except hereafter when it is sought to amend or repeal it.

There is no limitation as to the amount of property, either real estate or personalty, that the corporation may hold, whether it come by gift, purchase, or otherwise. They are authorized in the second section to take by purchase, gift, grant, devise, and bequest, and to hold, mortgage, lease, transfer, and convey for the purposes of said corporation. So that we have here an alleged purpose to incorporate an institution for relieving the sick and injured and to render service free, and also service that must be paid for and for which charges are to be made, and also seek to grant power to a corporation which is unlimited as to time and as to the amount of property that it may own, giving it the power to engage in a business of loaning, leasing, and mortgaging, of creating debts and taking mortgages. I suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] that there ought to be something in this bill that limits its duration and limits the amount of property that the institution may own.

I need not recall the history of corporations incorporated under the guise of religious corporations, charitable and other eleemosynary institutions, which have gathered great amounts of property. I do not mean that this is in the present day, but the English history shows it, and we ought to be careful in this day when by the very terms of this bill we exempt from taxation all the property that this corporation may acquire by purchase, gift, grant, devise, and bequest, and all the loans that it may create and secure by mortgages, as well as the property in which they may in any wise be interested, whether for an alleged charitable purpose, or purposes beneficial to humanity, in the maintaining of a hospital in Paris. We ought to be slow to pass unnoticed a bill of this character, granting all of these powers, making no limitation as to the duration of the corporation and no limitation as to the amount of property it may own or upon the question of taxation. For instance, they may have an office in Georgia, my own State, or in Illinois, or anywhere else. They may own property in the State of Georgia, in California, or in Illinois, unlimited as to amount, any sort of property, engage in any sort of business, and not a dollar's worth of taxation shall be paid to the State of Georgia or the State of Illinois or any other State in this Union.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if in his opinion this exemption would go so far as to make it impossible for a State or municipality to tax this institution?

Mr. BARTLETT. It will not, and for the reason that Congress has not the power to incorporate this institution.

Mr. HILL. That is what I thought. Then it is only an exemption from Federal taxation.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not think so. I will answer the gentleman as best I can and I think to his satisfaction. If Congress has the power to incorporate this corporation, and to exempt it from taxation, the Constitution of the United States and the laws passed in pursuance thereof, and the treaties of the United States being the supreme law of the land, would prevent a State from taxing unless the bill contained a provision subjecting the institution to the power of the State to tax. The gentleman will recall that a case in point is that of McCullough against The United States Bank. There the question was raised that the State could not tax the shares of the United States Bank, because it was a United States corporation, and for the first time in the history of this country the question was raised whether Congress had the constitutional power to incorporate a bank. It was raised upon the question of whether Maryland could enforce its tax laws against the United States bank, situated in Maryland. The Supreme Court, in order to prevent the State of Maryland from enforcing its tax execution against the United States bank, decided that Congress had the power to incorporate a United States bank, and, therefore, Maryland had no right to tax it. So the question is answered, I hope to the gentleman's satisfaction.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, section 3 allows this corporation to charge a reasonable price for its services.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Section 9 provides that the property, real and personal, of said corporation shall be exempt from taxation.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Section 2 provides that the corporation is authorized to take by purchase, gift, grant, devise, and bequest, and to hold, mortgage, lease, transfer, and convey real and personal property, and so forth, as may be deemed necessary for the wants or development of the corporation. Would not the gentleman's objections be removed if the bill were so amended as to eliminate section 9, which exempts the corporation from taxation?

Mr. BARTLETT. In a measure, yes; but not all of them. That would help. I think there ought to be some sort of provision limiting the life of the corporation and limiting the amount of property that it may hold. So far as I am concerned, I might be content to let a thing pass that I did not think Congress could put any life into by passing it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not know whether the gentleman has distinguished between this and the American Academy at Rome, and, as I recall, the American Archeological Institute in Athens.

Mr. BARTLETT. I did not draw any distinction between those. I remember now that I did not vote for either one of those propositions.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I was only inquiring to know whether the gentleman based his objection generally to Congress authorizing the corporation to do business abroad.

Mr. BARTLETT. I stated to the House, and it is a reiteration of the things I have frequently said, that I did not believe that Congress had the constitutional power to authorize such a corporation as this.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But the Congress has passed those two bills, as I say, and I did not know whether the gentleman had referred to them.

Mr. BARTLETT. Congress has sometimes done things which were afterwards declared to be void.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; I have about finished.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not doubt, I take it, the authority of Congress to incorporate this company as a District corporation here if its work is to be confined in the District?

Mr. BARTLETT. No; doubtless it could; but I stated, having passed a law which required all these corporations to be established in a certain way in that case until it was repealed, that is the law.

Mr. MANN. That does not go to the question of power.

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. That goes to the question of propriety.

Mr. BARTLETT. Of method; yes.

Mr. MANN. Now, if we have the power to incorporate this company to transact business in the District of Columbia, have we not the same power to incorporate it to transact business in some other places as a District corporation? For instance, here is a State, one that is very much in the eye of the people just at present, which has extremely liberal corporation laws, called "the mother of trusts."

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And a large share of the corporations that have been incorporated under the laws of that State have been intended not for purposes of transacting business in the State, but for the purpose of transacting business out of the State, and I believe no one questioned the power of the State to do that.

Mr. BARTLETT. No.

Mr. MANN. Although a good many have questioned the propriety.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; and whenever they have attempted to do business in a State other than that of their creation against the laws of that State the Supreme Court has upheld the laws of that State and sent them out.

Mr. MANN. Of course, they have no right to go into other States except under the laws of that State, nor can we confer——

Mr. BARTLETT. Exactly.

Mr. MANN (continuing). Any power upon those corporations—although that is suggested by the report, I regret to say—which would not be given by the French law, as far as Paris is concerned. The report in this case seems to indicate this company would have much more liberal concessions or powers granted to it in Paris if it were incorporated by the United States than would be the case if it were incorporated under the French law.

Mr. BARTLETT. On account of international comity.

Mr. MANN. That they might treat them better, and whoever drew the report seems to have based his statement upon the opinion of somebody else who did not know.

Mr. BARTLETT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have thus given my views about the bill, and I say I dislike very much to stand in the way of what purports to be philanthropic and charitable purposes; but I dislike more to have those purposes used, as I fear they may be used and have been used, to enact laws which do not meet my approval and which have no authority in the fundamental law of our land to be enacted. I may be very lonesome in occupying that position. It may be that I have outlived all that, but still those are my convictions, and I have got too far advanced in years to change them before I die. Therefore I make these suggestions, and my friend can answer them. I still reserve the right to object.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Connecticut desire to ask a question or to be heard?

Mr. HILL. To be heard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Georgia objects?

Mr. BARTLETT. I reserve the right to object, if I may be permitted to do so.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with very great attention to the learned argument of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] as to the constitutional power of Congress to grant charters for purposes of the kind indicated in this bill, and I think that nobody can differ from him in the conclusion he reaches as to the United States charters, but this bill, as was pointed out by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], proposes merely to give a charter in the District of Columbia. But the gentleman from Georgia then proceeds to question our power to execute the provisions of this charter in a foreign country. We do not contend that we have any power because of a charter in the District of Columbia which we can force upon the people of France or of any other country without treaty provisions to that effect, but there can be no question whatever that a charter granted by our Congress to a hospital situated in Paris would receive consideration both from the Government of France and in the courts of France far greater than if it were incorporated in any other way. International comity would give this charter of the District of Columbia a standing in France at least equal to the standing which we in New York give to the French hospital in New York, which is incorporated under the French laws and of which French citizens are the directors and which takes care of French people in the city of New York. I feel certain that the Republic of France would give equal recognition such as the State of New York gives to the French corporation incorporated for the same purposes and operating in the same manner in which our corporation would operate in France.

The real reason why it was necessary to come and ask for a charter here was because the American Hospital of Paris, which is now in operation and performing services, the value of which can not be overestimated, was forced to be incorporated under an act known as the "Religious Disabilities Act," in France, by the terms of which the hospital is prohibited from receiving a sum by devise or bequest greater than 500 francs. Now, there are already a very large number of thousands of dollars promised to the American Hospital of Paris as soon as it is legally able to receive these sums, either by gift or by bequest, and I feel confident that there will be a great deal more money forthcoming if this hospital can legally receive the sums as they accrue. Now, under this charter those sums of money could be received by this hospital and could be administered by the directors for the purposes specified in the face of the bill.

I can not quite agree with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] as to the inadvisability of passing the bill in its present form, because even though we have not limited the life of the corporation nor limited the amount they may receive by devise or bequest, we have specifically stated in section 10 that this act shall be subject to alteration, amendment, or repeal, a fact which, of course, is inherent in any act of Congress, at any rate.

But I would suggest to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT]—and I know on unanimous-consent day, even though I were able to prevail over him in the argument, he would still have the power to put the bill off the calendar—I suggest to him that if these gentlemen who are named as directors in this bill or any of their successors should conduct themselves unbecomingly to the dignity of the charter, or should they depart from the eleemosynary character of the charter, Congress could step in at once and repeal the charter or amend it in any way that seemed suitable. I trust the gentleman from Georgia——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield for information? Is the property of the French hospital in New York owned by the French Government?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. It is a corporation incorporated under the laws of France.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is that corporation taxable?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I do not know whether it is or not.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It does seem that property could not be exempt from taxation in the State of New York.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Our policy is to exempt eleemosynary institutions.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Whether owned by this country or otherwise?

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it the policy of the State of New York to tax property owned by eleemosynary or other institutions of that character when the income is not used for the purposes of the institution? In other words, an office building owned by it would not be exempt?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I think it is only the property that is used for eleemosynary purposes.

Mr. BARTLETT. We have the same law in Georgia, for instance, that exempts churches from taxation as well as the property of the Masonic orders, but we do not exempt that property which is rented out for stores and which produce revenue, and I did not think New York did that.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. The gentleman is correct in his opinion. So far as I am concerned, if it would satisfy the gentleman from Georgia and he would let the bill receive consideration, I would consent, so far as I am able to do so, to strike out section 9, which exempts the property from taxation. This property will be in France, anyway, and we can not exempt property in France from taxation.

Mr. MANN. Why does the gentleman say the property will be in France?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I judge it will be. It is not defined by the bill, but probably it will be.

Mr. MANN. Is it not more profitable to invest money in this country than in France?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I think for the purpose of a hospital a bequest would more likely be made in securities which could be handled by the directors over there in Paris.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But would not the location of that property be in the District of Columbia?

Mr. MANN. I think it would be more profitable to invest the money in the District of Columbia, where it would not be taxed, than it would be to invest it in France, where the rate of interest is lower and the taxes would run against it.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. My only purpose in making the suggestion was to overcome the objection of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that in granting these franchises we ought to put in a time limit and also a limit on the amount of property to be acquired?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I should think that would be of very doubtful value. We can put that amendment to the act at any time we wish or we can repeal it entirely.

Mr. MANN. Of course; but the other day we increased the limit of property which a corporation in Italy might acquire from a million dollars to a million and a half dollars.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That was the National Academy at Rome, was it not?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Has that a fixed period of charter?

Mr. MANN. I am not sure about that, but I understand it has a fixed amount. Usually these acts of incorporation do carry a 99-year provision, or something of that sort, to which there could be no valid objection.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. There could be no objection whatever to such a provision in this bill.

Mr. MANN. Could not the gentleman ascertain the amount of property which would be perfectly agreeable to the gentlemen who desire to incorporate this as a maximum limit?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I think I can state on my own responsibility that the sum of $250,000 would be reasonable for their buildings.

Mr. MANN. I think the total limit would be more than that, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. And I will add that they have promises of sums of money aggregating $50,000 or $60,000 at the present time.

Mr. MANN. Have they not already acquired considerable property?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Just the hospital buildings and grounds. I can not state the exact value.

Mr. MANN. Suppose we make it a million dollars and strike out section 9?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Would the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] be satisfied with that amendment?

Mr. MANN. It might not remove his objection to the bill, but it might remove his objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will permit, if we should strike out section 9, which relates to the official residence of this institution, would that not render liable to taxation all the personal property that the institution owns or holds in the United States?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] correctly pointed that out. I think that is the fact.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Under section 2 the corporation has the option of owning or holding property, real or personal, either in France or in the United States. Now, presuming it exercises its functions to the extent of holding a majority of it in the United States, technically it would be holding and owning it within the limits of the District of Columbia, and if you strike from the bill the section waiving taxation, so far as that is concerned, what is the consequence? Is the property taxable or not taxable? I should say it was taxable.

Mr. MANN. Certainly it would be.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Then is it the purpose of this House to render it subject to taxation? If so, you strike out section 9. If not, you leave in section 9.

Mr. MANN. Suppose they buy an office building. Why should they not pay taxes on it?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. That is not for me to answer.

Mr. MANN. They do not expect to use that office building for eleemosynary purposes.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. These holdings are to be held in the United States. What part of the United States? In the home office of the corporation, perhaps to the amount of half a million dollars. Now, they are either subject or not subject to taxation. That question is to be answered by the specific provisions of this bill. If there is not a specific provision absolving them from taxation, the burden falls on this institution. If there is a provision absolving them, they will be relieved. Do you wish to relieve them or not relieve them of that burden?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I think that all property that is used for eleemosynary purposes should be exempted from taxation. I understand that is the principle that prevails in most of the States.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Suppose they acquired an office building in the city of New York, for instance. There is no question but that that would be taxable in the city of New York, because it is used as an investment. It is not used directly for the purposes of the charity.

Mr. BARTLETT. We have the right to charter these people, and we have got the right to say that they shall not be taxed anywhere, because the supreme lawmaking body of the land is the Congress of the United States, exercising the power within its jurisdiction.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be temporarily passed over until the gentlemen can agree upon something.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT. I am perfectly willing that the bill should be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Georgia object to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask that it be passed over without prejudice. I do not want to have to remain here all day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I withdraw my request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his request for a moment?

Mr. BARTLETT. I will.

Mr. HILL. I am heartily in favor of the passage of the bill in some form and hope that no action will be taken which will prevent it during this session of Congress, because I think it is an institution that is greatly needed and ought to be encouraged. And yet there is a feature of the bill which I think should be changed and which, if the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] could be complied with, might be changed, so that it would have a reasonable certainty of passing at this session of Congress.

I am in favor of the proposition made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], that section 9 should either be stricken out or modified.

In the State of Connecticut we have had a great deal of trouble in years gone by with such bills as this, especially with charitable associations which have been incorporated. At first they were authorized to hold property and have it free from taxation, until we were forced in that State to put in a provision that the exemption from taxation should apply only to such property as was actually used and occupied by the association for its own purposes. In other words, they were not permitted, as the gentleman from Illinois has suggested, to buy an office building in the District of Columbia or the city of New York and occupy one room in it or a portion of it and rent out the rest for profit, and thereby enable them to sustain the institution on the free basis from the gain on real estate held for purposes of profit, thus depriving the State of what would otherwise be taxable property. I do not think this should be done in this case. I do not believe that it is right and proper that this Congress should give to any institution, I do not care how good the purpose may be, the right to hold an unlimited amount of property free from taxation.

I have a very distinct recollection of a very large bank in the city of New York to-day that a great many years ago received a charter, I think, as a water-power company and is now doing a banking business under that charter. This language is broad enough to enable almost any character of business to be carried on under the terms of this act, anything which is necessary for the "wants" or the development of the institution," giving them the power to have entire exemption from taxation whether the institution itself personally uses or occupies the property or not, and I think that that is unfair and unjust. I would go further than the gentleman from Illinois. I would not deem it necessary to strike out section 9 entirely, although, of course, that would strike at the root of the whole evil, but it certainly ought to be amended to provide that only so much of the property as is actually occupied for the hospital institution for its own purposes may be free from taxation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. As the property which is to be actually occupied for hospital purposes is in a foreign land——

Mr. HILL. Not all of it.

Mr. MANN. I understand all of it.

Mr. HILL. Oh, no. It has an office in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. It may have an office here, but it will have no hospital here.

Mr. HILL. No; but it could hold real estate here for its own purpose.

Mr. MANN. Oh, it could invest in real estate here, but it has no use for real estate here so far as its eleemosynary side is concerned.

Mr. HILL. No; but the headquarters and the office of the association must be in the United States, and I think the question is rather a fine one. I think the wise thing would be to strike out section 9. As I understand it, the gentleman who proposes the bill is entirely willing to strike out that section. I hope that the bill may be passed with that section eliminated.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my request that I made to pass the bill without prejudice at this time, and say just a word more and then I shall be through.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman wish the bill to be considered at this time?

Mr. BARTLETT. No; I do not ask to have it passed without prejudice. I still reserve my objection and ask unanimous consent to proceed for a minute or two.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia withdraws his request and reserves his right to object.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I have made a suggestion to the gentleman from New York to strike out section 9 to limit the life of the institution and to limit the amount of property that it may hold. Under those circumstances I do not think I shall object to the bill being considered, but of course I would not promise to vote for it even then. I could not, under my view of the power of Congress. I stated that Congress did not have any power to create such a corporation, and I have here an authority, a very influential authority, which I wish to cite upon that proposition. It is an opinion delivered by Chief Justice Marshall in the case of Osborn against United States Bank.

Mr. MANN. He used to be considered a pretty good authority.

Mr. BARTLETT. He is still a good authority when we come to determine the law. There is, however, nothing that is good authority as against the clamor of the demagogue and the mob, sometimes. Of course, I do not mean to say that my friend is a demagogue, but no doubt he understands the reference.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Nobody misunderstands the gentleman, and nobody is offended.

Mr. BARTLETT. In this case of Osborn against the bank, Ninth Wheaton, the court reviewed the case of McCulloch against Maryland, and I read from the opinion of Chief Justice Marshall:

> Is that law unconstitutional? This point was argued with great ability and decided by this court, after mature and deliberate consideration, in the case of McCulloch v. State of Maryland. A revision of that opinion has been requested, and many considerations combine to induce a review of it. The foundation of the argument in favor of the right of a State to tax the bank is laid in the supposed character of that institution. The argument supposes the corporation to have been originated for the management of an individual concern, to be founded upon contract between individuals, having private trade and private profit for its great end and principal object. If these premises were true, the conclusion drawn from them would be inevitable. This mere private corporation, engaged in its own business, with its own views, would certainly be subject to the taxing power of the State as any individual would be; and the casual circumstance of its being employed by the Government in the transaction of its fiscal affairs would no more exempt its private business from the operation of that power than it would exempt the private business of any individual employed in the same manner. But the premises are not true; the bank is not considered as a private corporation whose principal object is individual trade and individual profit, but as a public corporation, created for public and national purposes. That the mere business of banking is, in its own nature, a private business and may be carried on by individuals or companies having no political connection with the Government is admitted, but the bank is not such an individual or company. It was not created for its own sake or for private purposes. It has never been supposed that Congress could create such a corporation. The whole opinion of the court in the case of McCulloch v. State of Maryland is founded on and sustained by the idea that the bank is an instrument which is "necessary and proper for carrying into effect the powers vested in the Government of the United States."

And so I might go on, and I repeat that following that decision where the original one was reaffirmed and a distinction clearly marked that no private concern created for private purposes, having no connection with the United States, not discharging a public function or public duties, either a fiscal agent of the Government to issue bills, money for the benefit of the people at the instance of the Government in the way pointed out by that act, following the decisions in the national bank cases reaffirming the same doctrine, all these cases have never gotten away from the doctrine laid down that a mere private corporation for eleemosynary purposes or private profit can not be incorporated by Congress. I have thus, for the first time having seen this bill, thought proper, as I did on one other occasion, to call attention to these matters, because I do not think we have the power to extend to this corporation or any other corporation engaged in a private business, owning property, to be exempt from taxation; and if this bill, if I am correct, is passed, it is not worth anything to the incorporators so far as those objects are concerned.

I can not exactly bring myself to the position, because I believe as I do and because that is my position, to say that I will not permit the bill to be considered. I do not think I am called upon to do that; it is not dangerous enough to anybody's interest or the public interest to stand alone in the way of having it considered. If it is passed, if my views are correct, it can do nobody any harm, because the courts will take care of that, and if I am wrong about it, it may do a great deal of good. However, I do not think I am wrong, but I am willing to have it considered. I shall not vote for it, however.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Georgia does not object.

Mr. BARTLETT. If certain amendments are offered.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have no objection to the unanimous consent.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 9 and insert in lieu thereof the following:
"SEC. 9. That this charter shall continue for a term of 50 years: Provided, That at no time shall this corporation hold real estate except for the necessary use of offices and hospital purposes of this hospital."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman, Ought not the gentleman to say instead of "this corporation" and "this hospital" "said corporation" and "said hospital"?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the word "said" be substituted for the word "this" at those two places.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman further, Is there to be an amendment limiting the amount of property which the corporation can acquire?

Mr. BARTLETT. I thought this did it. It states "real estate."

Mr. MANN. As I understand the amendment, it limited real estate to the property actually used for hospital purposes, but it seems to me there ought to be a limitation in the amount of property which the corporation could acquire.

Mr. BARTLETT. I think so, too.

Mr. MANN. That could be added.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend section 2 by adding at the end of it:

Provided, That the total value of the property owned at any one time by said corporation shall not exceed $1,000,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 7, after the word "then," insert the following:
"Provided, That the total value of the property owned at any one time by the said corporation shall not exceed $1,000,000."

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I wish the gentleman from Illinois would increase the amount. As I understand, this property will be donated by benevolent citizens.

Mr. MANN. I asked the gentleman from New York how much he wished should be the limit, and he said $200,000 would be an extreme limit.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. That is for the real estate. I did not mean personal property.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to an increase in the amount.

Mr. HILL. If the gentleman will stop to think for a moment, in all probability it would not bring a revenue out of which it owned of over 3 per cent——

Mr. MANN. I say, I have no objection.

Mr. HILL. I move to amend by making it $5,000,000, as long as we are going to do it.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. BARTLETT. Not over $2,000,000.

Mr. HILL. Well, I move to amend it by making it $2,000,000. I want to see the United States creditably represented in this institution at Paris. If people are willing to give their money to this purpose I think they ought to be allowed to do it.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HARRISON of New York, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 331. Joint resolution extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under certain contingencies.

WASHINGTON-OREGON CORPORATION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A while ago we passed the bill S. 4663 that had been read on a previous day. The attention of the Chair was not called to the fact that there were some House amendments to the bill and that they were not agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. And also reconsider the vote by which we passed the bill to the third reading.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the words "the right" and insert in lieu thereof "a revocable license," so that it will read:
"Under the conditions and restrictions in this act contained, a revocable license."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk reported the next amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 2, strike out the word "grant" and insert in lieu thereof the word "license."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk reported the next amendment, as follows:

Page 2, lines 2 and 3, strike out the words "during the pleasure of Congress" and insert in lieu thereof "at the discretion of the Secretary of War."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the amended bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAWLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PATENTS TO SEMINOLE ALLOTTEES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 23184) directing the Secretary of the Interior to deliver patents to Seminole allottees, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman who is especially interested in this is engaged on other important work over in Baltimore, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GRANTING LANDS TO YUMA, ARIZ.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 19409) granting certain lands to the town of Yuma, Ariz.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described tracts of lands be, and the same are hereby, granted to the town of Yuma, a municipal corporation of Yuma County, Ariz., and its successors, for public purposes as herein limited and defined, to wit:

Tract No. 1: That portion of the tract of land lying and being within the exterior boundaries of section 35, township 16 south, range 22 east, San Bernardino meridian, in Arizona, and known as the United States military reservation, or the quartermaster's of said United States military reservation, and on the west boundary line of block No. 4, of said town of Yuma, according to White's survey thereof, which is 208.71 feet south from the left and south bank of the Colorado River, and running thence west 150 feet; thence north to the left and south bank of the Colorado River; thence along the left and south oank of the said river to a point due north of the place of beginning; and thence south to said commencement point, and containing, approximately, 1 acre; together with a perpetual easement and right of way over, across, through, and under a strip of land 40 feet in width on the east side of said United States military reservation, and adjoining the west side of said block No. 4, for a roadway and conduit way to and from said last-described and granted tract of land: Provided, That the said town of Yuma shall pay all expenses of an official survey and platting of the tracts to be so patented.

SEC. 2. That no part of said described and granted tracts of land shall be sold or conveyed by said town to any person or corporation whatsoever for private use, but shall be held in perpetuity by said town and its successors for public purposes: Provided, however, That said town and its successors may convey any portion or portions thereof to the State of Arizona, or any of its county, municipal, educational, or military corporations or organizations for actual public use, and such conveyances may be made by the proper officers of said town or its successor upon and by the resolution of its governing body, notwithstanding any law of said State describing the manner in which municipalities shall convey real property.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 12, by inserting after the word "thence" the word "south."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk reported the next amendment, as follows:

Amend, page 3, lines 6 and 7, by striking out the words "two hundred and eight and seventy-one one-hundredths" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and fifty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk reported the following amendment:

Amend, page 3, line 17, by adding after the word "land" the following proviso:

"Provided, That the said town of Yuma shall pay all expenses of an official survey and platting of the tracts to be so patented."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SALE OF CERTAIN LANDS IN MONTANA FOR PARK PURPOSES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 6946) authorizing the sale of certain lands in the Flathead Indian Reservation to the town of Ronan, State of Montana, for the purposes of a public park and public-school site.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to sell and convey to the town of Ronan, Mont., under such terms, conditions, and regulations as he may prescribe, not to exceed 20 acres of unallotted tribal land within the Flathead Indian Reservation, at not less than its appraised price; said lands to be used by the town of Ronan for school, park, or other public purposes: Provided, That the net proceeds received from the sale of said lands shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Flathead Indians and draw interest at the rate now provided by law, and may thereafter be used for the benefit of said Indians.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. PRAY. That bill, Mr. Speaker, is on the Union Calendar. I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] Without objection, that will be done.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PRAY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to offer for immediate passage an important resolution, which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PAGE). The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 593.

Resolved, That Hon. JOSHUA W. ALEXANDER, a Representative from the State of Missouri, be, and hereby is, elected Speaker pro tempore during the temporary absence of the Speaker.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to notify the Senate that the House has elected Hon. JOSHUA W. ALEXANDER, a Representative from the State of Missouri, as Speaker pro tempore during the temporary absence of the Speaker.

Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to inform the President of the election of Hon. JOSHUA W. ALEXANDER, a Representative from the State of Missouri, as Speaker pro tempore of the House of Representatives during the temporary absence of the Speaker.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, the resolution which we passed this morning has to be signed by the Speaker. The Speaker is not in the city. He has designated Mr. ALEXANDER as the Speaker for the day. The person designated is not authorized to sign the joint resolution, and it becomes necessary that some one should properly be selected, and I therefore ask that the resolution just read be passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. ALEXANDER resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will state it. But first the Chair will request the gentleman from Pennsylvania to suspend a moment.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

H. J. Res. 331. House joint resolution extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under certain contingencies.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Has the joint resolution been signed? If it has, I shall not put the question. My intention was to put the question before the resolution was signed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution has been signed.

Mr. CANNON. Regular order.

DAMS ACROSS DUCK RIVER, HICKMAN COUNTY, TENN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 24197) to authorize Carl J. Kiefer and Laurent Lowenberg to construct two dams across Duck River, in Hickman County, Tenn.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Carl J. Kiefer and Laurent Lowenberg, their successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate two dams across Duck River, in Hickman County, State of Tennessee, at points suitable to the interests of navigation, one about 5 miles east of Centerville, near mouth of Swan Creek, and the other about 4 miles east of first dam, near mouth of Willeys Branch, in the State of Tennessee, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved June 23, 1910, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters,' approved June 21, 1906."

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I want to reserve the right to object. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce if he is willing to let these six bills go over without prejudice to the next unanimous-consent day? I notice that there are six here of the same kind.

Mr. ADAMSON. So far as I am personally concerned, Mr. Speaker, I have no interest in the bills, but they represent enterprises all over the country the promoters of which would like to know what their status is, and if Congress should finish its work and adjourn before the next unanimous-consent day they would lose time in starting their work.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Georgia permit an interruption?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that as to several of these bills—five of them, anyhow—the bills are not correctly printed as reported by the committee. It seems to me that the gentleman had better accept the suggestion of my colleague, Mr. FOSTER, and in the meantime have the bills corrected, so as to show the amendments recommended by the gentleman's committee.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I confess to having been away, for providential causes, and I have not circumstantially examined the text of the bills, and I am not prepared to deny the statement of my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. He is doubtless correct, as he generally is, in his statements. As I said before, I personally have no objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER]. I do not know, however, what the authors of the several bills will say. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] is here, and if he is willing I will consent that this bill go over.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman not to object to the consideration of this bill. It is very much desired to get it passed at the present session of Congress. I personally know that the river is not navigable, and this is being done out of abundant precaution, to get the consent of Congress. It does not or can not in any way interfere with navigation to construct a dam across this river. There are times at a point where you could not run a canoe down the river without getting out and dragging it over the shoals, and it is desired to get this legislation enacted, so that the parties can begin the construction of the dam in order to supply electric power to enterprises which are desired to be inaugurated in that vicinity. I beseech the gentleman not to object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire at this time to object to some of these bills. I would say that I have some serious objection as against a part of them. I want to be perfectly frank with the House and say that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] was unavoidably called home on account of the serious illness of his brother. I know that two weeks ago he talked to me about these bills, and I know that we have some ideas about them which we would like to take up when they are considered. He has introduced a bill in the House, and I think Senator BURTON has in the Senate, in reference to granting rights to build dams across navigable rivers. For these reasons I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] that this bill, with the others, be permitted to go over until next unanimous-consent day.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I realize that I am powerless to do otherwise. If the gentleman intends to insist upon his objection, there is nothing else that I can do except to consent that they go over, and yet I wish to appeal to the gentleman that in the urgency of this matter and the absolute lack of navigability in the river he will not insist on his objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Tennessee think that is a fair observation? It is not the fault of my colleague from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] that there is this urgency about the bill. Why was not the bill introduced before?

Mr. PADGETT. It has been pending for some time.

Mr. MANN. It was introduced May 6, 1912; less than two months ago.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If gentlemen expect that they can get bills passed by Congress by sticking a penny in the slot, then they have another think coming. Of course I am not referring to the gentleman from Tennessee, but to others who are outside of Congress.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I remind my friend, the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee, that all of these bills involve the same question, which is the line of cleavage between the two sides of advocacy in the House and in the Senate. If one of them goes over, I think all of them ought to go over together. I further remind gentlemen that since this bill and all of these bills have been introduced there has been no negligence on the part of the committee.

Mr. PADGETT. None whatever.

Mr. ADAMSON. We have been thrashing out the subject at the places where discussion and reasoning were necessary in order, if possible, to reconcile all differences between them and bring them into the House in shape to pass them.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statements made and the attitude upon the matter, I consent to the request of the gentleman from Illinois that they be passed over.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes; with the statement that I desire the same course to be pursued with respect to all of them.

Mr. FOSTER. All six of them.

Mr. ADAMSON. Because the same question that will determine one applies equally to all.

Mr. COOPER. Does that consent of the gentleman from Tennessee preclude the making of objection when the bills come before the House again?

Mr. MANN. Oh, not at all.

Mr. ADAMSON. No.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I notice that in all of these bills the committee has adopted a new phraseology, giving the consent of Congress for the construction of dams when authorized by the laws of the State. Just what is the reason for making this change from the accredited form used in the past?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman that I have been observing the discussions of the question and the reasoning of the Waterways Commission and the letters of the Secretary of War, and the line of cleavage between the two classes of advocates seems to be whether or not Congress will undertake at this time to govern the relations between the company and its patrons in each State or whether it will wait and see if the States will properly adjust those things. Therefore it was suggested, inasmuch as the Waterways Commission had suggested that for the present the question be left for the States to determine, that we adhere to our long-time policy of leaving that without the assumption on the part of the Government of regulating the rates of charge to be made by those water-power companies. As to the language respecting the consent, if the gentleman from Illinois will look at the different bills he will see that the use of those words was adopted in some bills and not in others, because the language and the grammar came along more euphoniously.

Mr. MANN. I see it was adopted in all of them.

Mr. ADAMSON. Oh, I do not think in all. I do not think that is material, anyway.

Mr. MANN. I ask whether it is the assumption of the committee that when we give power to a corporation to construct a dam across a navigable stream, unless you put in there that it shall only be done when authorized by the laws of the State, they have authority to do it, regardless of the laws of the State?

Mr. ADAMSON. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. I have always assumed that when Congress gave power to construct a dam or bridge across a navigable stream it was essential for the corporation organized to have that power under the laws of the State to do that thing, because all that we gave is the consent to obstruct a navigable water.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman is entirely correct about that, but I will call attention to the further fact, which perhaps operated to induce the insertion of this language "when authorized by the State," that it is being insisted right now on one bill sent to conference this morning, and insisted by others, I understand in conversations with me, that we put in these bills a provision directly reserving the power to fix the rates, or a provision in the alternative that if the State fails to do it, then the Secretary of War may do it. Recognizing the position assumed by the gentleman from Illinois, which he has always occupied, and correctly so, that the State has the right and power and that it is its duty to regulate these things, we say, "when authorized by the State," and my recollection is that in one or two of the bills in which the language is not used it is recited that the grantee has already been authorized by the State to construct a dam.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will yield, I have always contended and do now that when Congress gives its consent to place an obstruction in or over a navigable water, it has the right to make terms for the granting of the consent, and that as one of the terms it has the power to retain the right to regulate charges—not to take that right away from the State, but exercising it within the limitation of the granting of the consent. So that Congress could say that the power should not cost more than so much to the consumers or otherwise. I do not understand, however, that that question is involved here, but if it is, then I am opposed to the amendment saying that Congress has no power when it grants consent to obstruct a navigable stream by a dam or bridge to impose conditions.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Illinois will examine the language of the reports——

Mr. MANN. I have read them all through.

Mr. ADAMSON. He will see that we have in each case met his last suggestion by saying that in each bill as well as in the general dam act itself Congress reserves the right to amend, alter, and repeal at any time.

Nobody questions the power of Congress in granting its consent to fix any terms it chooses, but we insisted under the general dam act, in the framing of which the gentleman from Illinois had large part, it is provided that the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers may impose all proper conditions which it is proper for Congress to impose. Now, I have nothing further to say.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request of the gentleman from Illinois is that this bill go over without prejudice.

Mr. ADAMSON. That all these bills take the same course; I want all to go together if one goes.

Mr. MANN. That would be down to and including H. R. 24028?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request is also applied to the following bills:

H. R. 24197. A bill to authorize Carl J. Kiefer and Laurent Lowenberg to construct two dams across Duck River, in Hickman County, Tenn.;

H. R. 23284. A bill to authorize the Great Northern Development Co. to construct a dam across the Mississippi River from a point in Scott County, Iowa, to a point in Rock Island County, Ill.;

H. R. 24067. A bill providing for the construction, erection, maintenance, and operation of a dam across the Osage River, in Miller County, Mo., for the purposes of improving navigation and the development of water power;

H. R. 23571. A bill authorizing and permitting Clinch River Power Co., its successors and assigns, to build and maintain a dam and a water-power development in and across Clinch River, in Anderson County, State of Tennessee;

H. R. 24196. A bill to authorize the construction of a dam across the Kootenai River, in the State of Montana; and

H. R. 24028. A bill authorizing and permitting the Tennessee Hydro Electric Co., its successors and assigns, to build and maintain dams and water-power development in and across Clinch and Powell Rivers, in Anderson County, State of Tennessee.

Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

TERMS OF DISTRICT COURT, WESTERN DISTRICT OF MICHIGAN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5935) to fix the terms of the district court for the western district of Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the term of the district court for the western district of Michigan for the southern division shall be held at Grand Rapids, commencing on the first Tuesdays in March, June, October, and December; and for the northern division at Marquette, commencing on the second Tuesdays of April and September; and at Sault Ste. Marie, commencing on the second Tuesdays in January and July.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DODDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SETTLEMENT OF ACCOUNTS DUE FOR BUILDING CORBETT TUNNEL, SHOSHONE IRRIGATION PROJECT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4862) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to investigate and settle certain accounts, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate and determine the several amounts remaining unpaid on account of labor and material performed and furnished in the construction of the Corbett Tunnel, in the State of Wyoming, and to pay the same out of the reclamation fund to the persons to whom such several amounts may be found to be justly due.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—I withdraw my objection.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how old are these claims? When were they contracted?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the claims are for labor and material furnished.

Mr. FINLEY. Furnished when?

Mr. MONDELL. For building the Corbett Tunnel.

Mr. FINLEY. How long since?

Mr. MONDELL. And the amendment proposed by the committee simply gives those having these claims the right to sue against the bond of the contractor.

Mr. FINLEY. That is the amendment reported by the committee?

Mr. MONDELL. That is the amendment proposed; it gives the parties the right to sue.

Mr. FINLEY. When were these claims contracted?

Mr. MONDELL. During the building of the tunnel, some three years ago.

Mr. FINLEY. It is no claim against the Government of the United States?

Mr. MONDELL. No.

Mr. FINLEY. I withdraw my objection.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That all persons having supplied labor or materials for the prosecution of the work of constructing the Corbett Tunnel, as a part of the Shoshone irrigation project, in the State of Wyoming, under any contract or contracts let for that purpose by the Government of the United States, and their assigns and legal representatives, are hereby given the full rights and remedies awarded to persons supplying labor and materials in the prosecution of public works, as set forth in the act of August 13, 1894, entitled 'An act for the protection of persons furnishing materials and labor for the construction of public works,' to the same force, extent, and effect as if the act had not been amended, modified, or repealed, with full right of action in the name of the United States for his or their use and benefit against any contractor or contractors and their sureties, upon any bond or bonds furnished to the United States under any such contract: Provided, That no action prosecuted under this act shall involve the United States in any expense."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMS). Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read as follows: "An act for the relief of certain persons having supplied labor and materials for the prosecution of the work of constructing the Corbett Tunnel of the Shoshone irrigation project."

On motion of Mr. RAKER, Mr. LAFFERTY, and Mr. MONDELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CAPT. ARTHUR HENRY ROSTRON.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was a joint resolution (H. Res. 306) to provide for the award of medals of honor to the captain, officers, and crew of the Cunard steamer Carpathia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, was the House resolution read? How does the House resolution get up now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed the House resolution was read heretofore and passed without prejudice.

Mr. ADAMSON. The author of the House resolution desires to move to lay that on the table in order to clear the way to pass the Senate resolution which follows.

Mr. FRANCIS. I desire to do that so as to have speedy action. The resolutions are practically the same, except the House resolution is somewhat broader. I ask that the House resolution be laid on the table, and I ask that the Senate resolution be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request just stated? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MANN. What is the request?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That the House resolution be laid on the table and that Senate joint resolution 111 be considered in lieu thereof.

Mr. MANN. The Senate resolution is now on the calendar and has not yet been reported, I think.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 111) to convey the thanks of Congress to Capt. Arthur Henry Rostron, and through him to the officers and crew of the steamship Carpathia of the Cunard Line, for the prompt and heroic service rendered by them in rescuing 704 lives from the wreck of the steamship Titanic in the North Atlantic Ocean.

Resolved, etc., That the thanks of Congress be, and the same are hereby, presented to Capt. Arthur Henry Rostron, and through him to the officers and crew of the steamship Carpathia of the Cunard Line, for promptly going to the relief of the steamship Titanic and heroically saving the lives of 704 people who had been shipwrecked in the North Atlantic Ocean.

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to cause to be made and presented to Capt. Rostron a suitable gold medal appropriately inscribed, which shall express the high estimation in which Congress holds the service of this officer, to whose promptness and vigilance was due the rescue of 374 women and children and 330 men.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purchase or manufacture of said medal, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FRANCIS] who introduced House joint resolution 306, which has just been laid on the table, that he is perfectly satisfied now to pass the Senate joint resolution.

Mr. FRANCIS. That is the idea.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to the consideration of this joint resolution although the Senate resolution proposes to grant the thanks of Congress to Capt. Rostron and the crew of the Carpathia. The House bill proposes to strike medals for all of them. There has been a good deal of praise for the captain and crew, to which I suppose they are entitled. To my mind there is nothing extraordinarily meritorious in going to the succor of the Titanic, but the action of Capt. Rostron is great in comparison with the action of Mr. Ismay, and I would like to put another kind of a medal on him.

Mr. MONDELL. Leather?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MEMORIAL DAY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was joint resolution (H. J. Res. 321) relative to observance of Memorial Day.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That as a tribute to the memory of those who fought and those who died in defense of their country, the flags on all Government reservations and property shall be lowered to half-mast between 12 o'clock noon and 12 o'clock and 5 minutes post meridian on each Memorial Day hereafter, and that wherever practicable bugles shall sound taps, bells shall be tolled, and a salute of 13 guns shall be fired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, in harmony with the agreement arranged between the gentlemen who objected to the consideration of the resolution the last time it was considered and others who are interested in the resolution, I have a couple of amendments that I desire to propose, and I will state the object of the amendments, that all may understand. The first is in line 8, to amend by striking out the last comma and inserting the word "and," and the second to amend by striking out everything in line 9 following the word "tolled" and all of line 10. I send the amendments to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 8, by striking out the last comma and inserting the word "and."

And amend lines 9 and 10 by striking out all after the word "tolled" in line 9.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the House resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FRENCH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

TENNESSEE SCHOOL LANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 18719) to authorize the State of Tennessee to sell school lands for educational purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of Tennessee be, and is hereby, authorized, through its legislature, to pass such laws as may be necessary and expedient for the sale, lease, or other disposition of school lands in said State, to the end that the money arising from said sale or lease of lands may be applied to the education of the children of the county wherein said lands are located, and also to provide for the preservation of said fund and the use of the same devoted to the education of the children.

SEC. 2. That any acts of the Legislature of Tennessee authorizing the sale of such lands as have heretofore been passed and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby ratified and confirmed so far as the assent of the United States to the same may be necessary to the confirmation thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, it seemed to me, upon examining this bill, that it was in the main for the benefit of a lumber company down there.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. How is that?

Mr. MANN. It seemed to me, on the examination of this bill and report, that the main beneficiary is a lumber company down there.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. What makes you think that?

Mr. MANN. Reading the report is what made me think it.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The report ought to show, as the facts are, that the bill is offered at the request of the superintendent of public instruction. I do not know whether a lumber company proposes to bid on this lumber, but that is immaterial.

Mr. MANN. There is an agreement already to sell this timberland to a lumber company down there, I think, probably for less than the value of it.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not know. Is the gentleman speaking from the report?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not think that means anything more than a statement of the value of the land.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] yield to me in order that I may ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. How has the State of Tennessee been disposing of its school lands heretofore?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. By sales. It has been all disposed of years and years ago nearly, and there is very little left in the State now.

Mr. MONDELL. How does this legislation come to be necessary at this late day when from the report there are only a section or two of lands left?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I take it that it becomes necessary because the superintendent of the county is of the opinion that this act of ratification by Congress is necessary.

Mr. MANN. I can give the gentleman that information. That is not the reason, if the gentleman from Tennessee will pardon me.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. What does the gentleman from Illinois mean?

Mr. MANN. I just want to state the reason why they are asking this legislation from Congress which the gentleman momentarily has probably forgotten. These are two sections of timberland on which nobody resides. No one resides in the township. It is all timberland or vacant land in the township. Under the law under which these lands were granted to Tennessee they can only be disposed of by the request of the people living in the township, either by vote or otherwise. As no one lives in the township, it seems to be impossible.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The gentleman from Illinois, when he interrupted me, prevented me from saying that while that land may not be occupied, the people of the county and the superintendent of instruction in that county desired this action to be taken.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly. Now, here the Government granted land for the benefit of schools in a township. Why should we sell it for the benefit of schools somewhere else? Supposing some time this township should become inhabited——

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Does the gentleman know anything about that township? He seems to know a good deal about this measure.

Mr. MANN. Yes; I do.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. What do you know about it?

Mr. MANN. I know what is in the report. It is now timbered land. They want to cut the timber off; and wherever they cut the timber off anywhere in this country somebody gets on the land for some purpose.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think that that land ought to remain there without being of any benefit to the State or the institutions of education in the State or in the county, lying back in the mountains where there probably will not be an inhabitant in the next hundred years?

Mr. MANN. Well, I should hope that there would be an inhabitant there within that length of time. But I do not believe that the Government should compel the State of Tennessee to keep a lot of ripe timber which could not be used in any way.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. This act does not compel a sale.

Mr. MANN. I say I do not believe the Government ought to compel them to keep ripe timber which will not increase in value.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I take it that this property perhaps would realize as much to the school fund of the State now as it ever will at any time. I imagine that it is not of any great value except for the timber.

Mr. MANN. They agree to sell it at $10 an acre.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. That is about twice what it is worth ordinarily. It would be a pretty good sale ordinarily.

Mr. MANN. Well, I should think that there is no timber company down there that would pay twice what it was worth.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Well, there might not be any down there, but sometimes there come some from Illinois that do not know any better, and they might pay it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. That may be. We are very often taken in when we go to Tennessee. [Laughter.] We have spent a good deal of money in Tennessee and got back very little for it.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. You have got this: You have got a better State and a better people to live among than you had before. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Oh, not many people have gone down there to live. They have bought timber and invested their money otherwise. Generally I think they have done well when they bought timberland.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Coming down seriously to the question, I think it very hard to beat an Illinois man on a trade. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. We are buying down there in that section of country timberland to make it into an Appalachian forest, and that is better land than this, based either on acreage or on timber.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. If the gentleman is serious about it, and he knows more about it than I do—and it is in my district, and I have been there—if he thinks it worth more than this, let him suggest a higher price. I do not care whether a lumber company in Illinois buys it or a lumber company anywhere else. In the interest of education, the people think it ought to be sold, and that is the only interest I have in it.

Mr. MANN. So far as education is concerned, we have given a section of land for the benefit of one township to help build schoolhouses. The people of another township want to get the property away from them.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. No; the people of the county.

Mr. MANN. Well, the people of the county. They are not entitled to it under the theory of the law under which it was granted to them at all. This is making it a pure present to the people of the county.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The bill leaves that to the legislature, does it not?

Mr. MANN. That does not make any difference.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I think it does. I think the legislature of the State ought to be permitted to settle that question. I do not think the Congress of the United States is interested in that proposition. These lands have been practically disposed of, and here is a section of the State that is not inhabited and Congress is giving the power to the legislature to do what is wise in that matter. Why it should be prohibited from taking such action for its benefit is hard for me to see.

Mr. MANN. Congress did prohibit it in the beginning—the very thing that this bill seeks to allow to be done.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. If Congress had not done that, we would not be here. The lands are all disposed of except a few sections.

Mr. MANN. I suspect a large share of it has been wasted. It has been so in other places, if not in Tennessee.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. That may be, but we are not legislating here now in the light of what has been done heretofore.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes, we are.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The gentleman may be right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, there are amendments to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read the first committee amendment, as follows:

Amend, page 1, by striking out all of lines 6 and 7 and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "of school lands in said State to the end that the money arising from the lease of said lands and the interest derived from the proceeds of the sale thereof may be applied to."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next committee amendment, as follows:

Amend, page 2, by striking out lines 2 and 3 and the word "children," in line 4, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "are located, and also to provide for the preservation of the proceeds of the sale of said lands in a permanent school fund, the interest of which only shall be devoted to the education of the children."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MOON of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STORM-DRAINAGE SYSTEM OF HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 24669) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make a survey and estimate of the cost of increasing the storm-drainage system, as well as the sanitary-sewer system, of the city of Hot Springs, abutting the Hot Springs Reservation, Ark.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, at the earliest practicable date, to make a survey of the sewer system of the city of Hot Springs, abutting the Hot Springs Reservation, Ark., and to prepare plans and estimate of the cost of increasing the present storm-drainage system, as well as the present sanitary-sewer system, of the city of Hot Springs, the report of survey, including estimate of cost of the work, to be submitted to Congress as soon as practicable after the 1st day of December, 1912. The sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to cover all expenses incident to the work herein authorized, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MIGRATORY GAME BIRDS OF UNITED STATES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 36) to protect migratory game birds of the United States.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all wild geese, wild swans, brant, wild ducks, snipe, plover, woodcock, rail, wild pigeons, and all other migratory game birds which, in their northern and southern migrations, pass through or do not remain permanently the entire year within the borders of any State or Territory, shall hereafter be deemed to be within the custody and protection of the Government of the United States, and shall not be destroyed or taken contrary to regulations hereinafter provided for.

SEC. 2. That the Department of Agriculture is hereby authorized to adopt suitable regulations to give effect to the previous section by prescribing and fixing closed seasons, having due regard to the zones of temperature, breeding habits, and times and line of migratory flight, thereby enabling the department to select and designate suitable districts for different portions of the country within which said closed seasons it shall not be lawful to shoot or by any device kill or seize and capture migratory birds within the protection of this law, and by declaring penalties by fine or imprisonment, or both, for violations of such regulations.

SEC. 3. That the Department of Agriculture, after the preparation of said regulations, shall cause the same to be made public, and shall allow a period of three months in which said regulations may be examined and considered before final adoption, permitting, when deemed proper, public hearings thereon, and after final adoption to cause same to be engrossed and submitted to the President of the United States for approval: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be deemed to effect or interfere with the local laws of the States and Territories for the protection of game localized within their borders, nor to prevent the States and Territories from enacting laws and regulations to promote and render efficient the regulations of the Department of Agriculture provided under this statute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have some one give some reason why this extraordinary legislation should be passed. Ultimately I expect to object. As far as I am concerned, however, I will be very glad to hear of any reason why such legislation should pass now or at any other time.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, I should be very glad to furnish the gentleman with, I think, ample reasons why the legislation should pass, but if his announced intention of objecting to the bill in any event is going to be carried out, I do not care to take the time of the House to offer the substantial reasons which I think do exist.

Mr. MONDELL. One slight objection to the bill which might perhaps be urged, although I suppose it would not have much weight just at this time, is that it is unconstitutional. I do not know that that would be an objection that would have any considerable weight with some people in these days.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, that is simply the assertion of the gentleman from Wyoming, and even as good a lawyer as he may be mistaken.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wyoming is not a lawyer, but the gentleman from Wyoming assumes that the Supreme Court of the United States is the court of last resort in questions of this character. The Supreme Court of the United States has said that the States are sovereign in control of game within their borders. The court said that years ago in the case of Grear against Connecticut, and more recently in the case of Ward against Racehorse. The matter is pretty well settled, it seems to me.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, the case which the gentleman cites of Grear against Connecticut is an argument in favor of this bill. If he had read the decision in the case carefully, he would have come to the conclusion—if he is basing his objection upon that—that this legislation ought to pass.

Mr. MONDELL. The case of Ward against Racehorse is a little more clearly in point. That is very clear, and it is quite recent.

Mr. WEEKS. Let me add this word, that no one contends that the General Government can in any way regulate the killing of birds of any character which are not migratory, but as to birds which pass from one section of the country to another, which are at times in the far North and at other times in the far South, they are the property of all of the people of the country and should be protected by the General Government under its police powers or under the general welfare clause of the Constitution.

Mr. MONDELL. It may be, Mr. Speaker, that game in Massachusetts is so well behaved and so fixed in its habits that it never passes beyond State lines. The game we have in our country, I think, is not well enough informed with regard to State boundaries to know when they cross it. I do not think our elk are so informed or our deer or antelope. Of course, it is possible that when game go across the State boundary they cease to be game and become a part of interstate commerce, which seems to be the gentleman's argument. But how does the gentleman propose to prove that these birds are not residents of the State—by affidavit of the creatures? The gentleman refers to the police powers of the General Government. I was not aware that the National Government could exercise police powers within the borders of a State. We have heard some very extraordinary suggestions with regard to the general welfare clause of the Constitution, but this is the first time I have heard it suggested that it authorized the National Government to assume control over game birds within a State.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, the confusion of the gentleman is indicated by his calling elk and deer migratory birds. We are attempting to treat of birds of the air that fly from one section of the country to the other.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Massachusetts had listened carefully to the gentleman from Wyoming, he would know that the gentleman from Wyoming did not refer to elk and deer as birds, but as game, and that he also referred to birds as game. According to the philosophy of the gentleman from Massachusetts, game, if it is migratory, ceases to be game and becomes interstate commerce, or something of that sort. Do I understand him that game is of two sorts—State and interstate?

Of course, the fact that this would require an innumerable Federal army along all of the watercourses and around all of the ponds and sloughs of all of the States, and would probably result in a considerable portion of the population of most of the States being haled before Federal courts to answer the charge of killing ducks at a time when a Federal understrapper said they should not be killed, is a matter of no consequence in the view of some gentlemen and should have no weight with us in the consideration of the bill. The bill proposes to place migratory birds within the custody and under the protection of the United States; that would of necessity demand the presence of Federal officials wherever the birds fly and wherever they light, in order that they might protect them, and if there were any of them killed contrary to the regulations issued, that those killing them might be haled before a Federal grand jury and indicted and tried in the Federal court; but little interferences of that kind with the rights of the citizens within the sovereign Commonwealths of the Union I suppose are not at all important in the opinion of the gentlemen who favor this bill.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman seems to apprehend that if this were enacted into law there would be too many Federal officials. The gentleman recalls, does he not, that when the Lacey bill was up, which sought to prevent the shipment outside of a State of game killed within its borders, under certain penalties, that identical argument was made to defeat that legislation—namely, that an excess of Federal officials would at once be created, that the people of the State would be harassed to death because of the intense desire of the National Government to prevent the extermination of certain kinds of birds. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that there has been no complaint of any excess of Government officials? Has the gentleman found anywhere that these prophecies have come true?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Wyoming did not object to the Lacey bill.

Mr. COOPER. No; but other gentlemen were just as apprehensive that the same sort of legislation would have the effect which he now imagines this would have.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think that proves anything; but does the gentleman imagine that if the taking of geese and brant and ducks in the State of Wisconsin is made punishable by a Federal law, it will not be necessary to have Federal officials in the great State of Wisconsin, with its splendid streams and beautiful lakes, to see that the law is enforced?

Mr. COOPER. Yes; and I have no doubt, although I have not consulted them, that the people of the State of Wisconsin would willingly endure the comparatively trivial burden of having a few officials there to prevent the extermination of the game. I can recall the time when the wild pigeons flew by the millions, and the heavens were darkened by them. Yet I read recently of the reward of a thousand dollars being offered for anyone who would furnish a male wild pigeon. There is a female wild pigeon in captivity in the zoological garden in Cincinnati, but they have been practically exterminated, and so it will be with these other migratory birds, which the gentleman from Massachusetts by this legislation seeks to preserve. I hope the gentleman from Wyoming will withdraw his objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I have such high regard for the people of Wisconsin that I can scarcely agree with the suggestion of the very worthy and honorable representative of a very considerable portion of that State, that the people there would welcome the establishment within their borders of Federal police jurisdiction. That may be so in Wisconsin, but it is not so in the State that I have the honor to represent. Out in the mountain country we realize that we have sovereign Commonwealths, and that upon the people of those Commonwealths there are placed under our form of government certain duties and responsibilities.

We do not shrink from the performance of those duties and responsibilities. Furthermore, I do not think there is a State in the Union whose people would not, after they come to consider it, protest most vigorously against having their game laws made in a Federal bureau at Washington and enforced by Federal game wardens.

With regard to the goings and comings and protection and taking of game within a State the Federal Government has not anything to do, and should not have anything to do with it and could not have anything to do without an amendment of the Federal Constitution.

Mr. WEEKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. WEEKS. The gentleman from Wisconsin is on sound ground in the statement he made, for I have a letter from the governor of his State indorsing this legislation and also a communication from the game warden of that State indorsing this legislation, and to the gentleman from Wyoming I will also say that the highest official in his own State—the governor—has written a letter indorsing this legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. I have no doubt but what there are men who have been elected to high office who have gotten very wrong on this and other questions. The fact they are wrong does not affect my position in regard to it at all. I will say to the gentleman frankly I think the whole thing is ridiculous beyond words. The idea of establishing Federal police jurisdiction over all States of the Union, along all the streams and around all the reedy ponds and beside all the sloughs, and subjecting the citizens of all the sovereign States of the Union——

Mr. BUTLER. Do not forget the babbling brooks.

Mr. MONDELL (continuing). To the danger of being hauled before a Federal grand jury and tried in a Federal court and sent to jail—a Federal jail, as one of my friends here suggests—for the doing of what? For doing what may be entirely a lawful thing for them to do—that is, to take game in accordance with the laws of the States. This is just another illustration of how recklessly and foolishly we are running into federalism. Some of the people of the States, on the one hand, desirous of being relieved from the performance of their duty in regard to these matters and willing to sell their sacred birthright of self-government for a measly mess of Federal patronage, and, on the other hand, what is infinitely more potent in a case of this sort, a coterie of very fine gentlemen in a Federal bureau busily engaged in enlarging the jurisdiction of their bureau until it shall embrace all the earth. What a glorious outlook the Bureau of Biology in the Department of Agriculture will have when it shall number its deputies by the thousand and tens of thousands, sleuthing all over the country, ready to nab every barefooted boy who goes with a single-barrel shotgun to shoot a duck on a pond back of the barn or on the brook below town.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BOWMAN. In the mining district of Pennsylvania it is very difficult to protect the game birds—and they are numerous—from the men who kill them, most of whom are foreigners only a short time in this country, and this measure is considered very important by most of the people who live in Pennsylvania.

Mr. MONDELL. My good friend wants to confess on behalf of the State of Pennsylvania that it either has not the courage or public spirit to protect the game birds within its borders; in other words, to do its duty. Now, I do not represent that sort of people. We do protect the game within our borders, and we do not propose to have the Federal Government have anything to do with it. We do not ask the Federal Government to help us protect it except as it may do so incidentally in carrying out its other work. The game belongs to the State, and I can imagine nothing more dangerous than to invite Federal police jurisdiction within the States in the way proposed by this bill. Of course, it appeals to some good people at first blush. It appeals to some good folks, high-minded people, who believe in the protection of game birds, as most of us do. They do not stop to think what a revolutionary thing it is to have game laws made by some clerks in a Federal bureau and enforced by a Federal judge. They say, "Let us take care of the birds; let us invite the Federal Government to help us; we have some lawless people within our borders whom we are powerless to control; let us bring in the strong arm of the Federal Government to control these lawless gun toters." Why, if you need Federal aid in Pennsylvania to prevent men from toting guns against the birds, you certainly would be entirely justified in appealing to the strong arm of the Federal Government to protect the people against the men who tote guns against their fellow men. Some of them are migratory, and human life is vastly more precious than bird life.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to ask the gentleman if this bill should become a law which would prevail, the national law or the State law which is passed to regulate the supervision and killing of game birds?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, the gentleman who drafted this legislation evidently hoped that they both would operate, but that the Federal law would be supreme. Of course the fact is that the legislation would not last long after the Supreme Court got hold of it, but in the meantime it would do a great deal of harm. The very fact it has been reported by a committee of this House, the very fact that it is seriously considered, is to me astounding, and I can not understand the frame of mind of men who propose a thing of that sort, men who have local pride, men who have faith in the people of their States, men who believe in our form of local self-government—I can not understand how such men can favor it for a moment, this scheme of Federal bureaucracy. I understand that the protection of game birds is an excellent thing. I live in a State where we have protected the large game better than any State in the Union, and in my State there are folks who occasionally get wrong on the same question and wonder why we have not invited the Federal Government in to help us out. We all know how a thing of this sort secures support. Local people who are interested in game preservation, and who grow impatient because the people of their States as represented in the legislatures do not look at things as they do, are easily influenced by the officials of a Federal bureau, endeavoring to extend their power and authority, into believing that if the Federal Government were to take hold of the matter everything would be adjusted just as they want it. Of course no one would be more disappointed or disgusted with the outcome than those same people, but in the meantime the harm would be done.

The fact that some good people get wrong on these questions does not make it right, does not change the constitutional aspect of the question, and does not in any way make it less harmful and mischievous.

Mr. FOWLER. What would become, then, of the game wardens of the States if this law passed?

Mr. MONDELL. They can go home or they can enlist under the Federal banner. They might, perhaps, be able to get jobs as Federal game wardens.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman wants to be fair, as he always does, and, of course, he knows the proviso especially provides that the law shall not interfere with the game laws of the States that are effective.

Mr. MONDELL. What the bill does is this:

Nothing herein contained shall be deemed—

This is the bill as it was before it was amended:

Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect or interfere with the local laws of the States and Territories for the protection of game localized.

I have said in my State the game is not acquainted with State boundaries.

Within their borders, nor to prevent the States and Territories from enacting laws and regulations to promote and render efficient the regulations of the Department of Agriculture provided under this statute.

As amended it provides:

That nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect or interfere with the local laws of the States and Territories for the protection of game or other birds resident and breeding within their borders.

So it would be necessary to have an affidavit in each case—from the bird, I suppose—that it was or was not a resident.

Mr. SIMS. Have them tagged like an automobile.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that refers to individual birds or class of birds?

Mr. BUTLER. Does not the gentleman from Wyoming think he has worked up into a frame of mind where he can justify the objection he intends to make?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman assumes that the fact that the bill is unconstitutional is sufficient reason for an objection, and the further fact that it is unwise, if it were constitutional, is a further reason.

Mr. SIMS. Has not the gentleman seen us try here to defeat bills championed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], and how we failed? What is the use of trying further?

Mr. WEEKS. I will make a suggestion to the gentleman from Tennessee that, in my opinion, there will be a failure in this case. The gentleman from Wyoming can object to this bill to-day, but the people of this country who are familiar with the subject are in favor of this legislation; and the bill, in my judgment, if it is ever gotten before the House, will pass, because it is right. But I do not care to take the time of the House if the gentleman is going to object to it to-day.

Mr. MANN. I think no one will hasten a discussion, because it is interesting to hear a constitutional discussion between the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who is not a lawyer, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], who is not one.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, it may be possible that as objectionable legislation as this may get on the statute books. All things are possible in these days. In these days of hysteria all things may come to pass, but if this law should be put on the statute books of the country its effect would be to shame every man who advocated it. It is unconstitutional. It deprives the people of the opportunity to legislate on their own affairs in their own way. It substitutes Federal bureaucracy for local self-government. It is contrary to our theory of government. I shall have to object.

INVESTIGATION OF COAL COMPANIES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (H. Res. 577) to investigate certain coal companies doing business in Two Harbors, Minn.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

House resolution 577.

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Corporations be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to make an investigation of the facts touching the handling and selling of coal at the city of Two Harbors, Minn., in accordance with the powers and authority granted to said commissioner by section 6 of an act entitled "An act to establish the Department of Commerce and Labor," approved February 14, 1903, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, to determine whether the said city of Two Harbors was and is prevented from purchasing coal in wholesale quantities by an agreement, understanding, or conspiracy by and between companies, persons, or partnerships engaged in the coal business and in interstate commerce, and to determine whether any of said companies, persons, or partnerships have committed acts in restraint of trade or otherwise contrary to law in connection with the matters herein referred to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] desire to be heard on this?

Mr. MILLER. I shall be pleased to answer any questions that the gentleman desires to ask. If you care to have a statement of the case——

Mr. MANN. This resolution, as I understand it, is to have the Bureau of Corporations investigate the matter of the sale of coal at Two Harbors, Minn. I should doubt very much the desirability of the Government starting in to investigate every local complaint of the violation of the antitrust law.

Mr. MILLER. It seems to have been in contemplation of those framing the Commerce and Labor act that an investigation of this kind should be had by that department, and they do make these investigations constantly.

Mr. MANN. It was I who first proposed the Bureau of Corporations and had charge of the bill which created it. It went through my hands. I should question whether those who framed it contemplated it should be used for the purpose of investigating local matters of this sort.

Mr. MILLER. In view of the statement just made I would not say that the framers of the bill had that in mind, but the language of the bill certainly empowers the Commissioner of Corporations to carry on such investigations.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly very comprehensive in its language, and ought to be.

Mr. MILLER. There is one reason in this particular instance that would hardly be found elsewhere. It might be found, but not ordinarily. These coal companies, which it is proposed shall be investigated, will not, I will say, require much of an investigation, and the investigation will not involve any large expense—none at all to speak of. The companies are all engaged in interstate commerce on a large scale. These are not retailers or men doing a small business. The number comprises practically all of the large coal companies which operate mines and sell, in wholesale quantities, coal out through the Northwest. I do not suppose it is necessary to mention their names. Their names are probably known to most of the membership of the House.

Mr. MANN. I would not know the names of the coal companies.

Mr. MILLER. I think these names are known pretty well throughout the country.

Mr. MANN. That may be. I have no objection to a resolution requiring the Bureau of Corporations to investigate coal companies. I should, however, doubt whether it is desirable to have a resolution passed directing the Bureau of Corporations to determine whether anybody is violating the antitrust law. I do not quite see how they can determine that question.

Mr. MILLER. They are not directed to determine it. They are directed to make an investigation to see whether or not any misconduct was committed in that direction. It is not necessary to make an official determination.

Mr. KENDALL. They are expected to report facts.

Mr. MANN. Well, the resolution says:

And determine whether any of the said companies, persons, or partnerships have committed acts in restraint of trade, or otherwise contrary to the law in connection with the matters herein referred to.

Mr. MILLER. That is perhaps stronger than I thought, but since the matter is brought to my attention it seems to me that is exactly the language contained in that paragraph of the Department of Commerce and Labor bill.

Mr. MANN. I think not, although my memory has not been refreshed in connection with that. It may be in conformity with the language of bills that have been introduced. The bureau has given much information and assistance to the Department of Justice, and to that extent it may be said that it is engaged in endeavoring to determine. But I question the advisability of Congress, at the request of any locality, directing the Bureau of Corporations to make an investigation to determine whether or not local people or the people of any particular locality are violating the antitrust law. I should say that from my city I could readily offer 50 such resolutions at any time.

Mr. MILLER. If the gentleman will permit me, I would like to make a statement of one or two facts that possibly have not come to the gentleman's attention.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that no facts have come to my attention in connection with this except the report. I understand that there is a peculiar situation there. I understand that the city of Two Harbors desires itself to go into the coal-handling business and sell coal to its people. It claims it has been discriminated against by these coal companies. I suppose it is so claimed because the companies do not desire to have the municipality to buy coal, or that is the claim, at least, instead of private dealers.

Mr. MILLER. That is the gist of the situation.

Mr. MANN. I will ask the gentleman to let this go over, anyhow.

Mr. MILLER. I will say to the gentleman that if this goes over now I do not suppose any additional reason could be advanced two weeks from now why it should be considered.

Mr. MANN. Possibly not.

Mr. MILLER. And if it is not considered at this session it might as well not be considered at all. I would like to urge upon the attention of the gentleman one or two things. It will take only a few minutes.

Mr. MANN. I simply reserve the right to object, and I hope the gentleman will discuss the question.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Minnesota has the floor.

Mr. RAKER. I understood objection was made.

Mr. MANN. No. I reserved the right to object until the gentleman had explained the resolution.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, the coal companies that come within the purview of this resolution are all engaged in interstate commerce, and number about seven. These are not coal companies that are local in their activities. They are coal companies that operate mines in Pennsylvania, in Illinois, in Ohio, in West Virginia, in Virginia, and some of the companies operate in several of these States. They ship the coal by way of the Great Lakes to the head of the lakes, which is the distributing point for the entire Northwest. These coal companies that so operate furnish the coal—probably 99 per cent of all the coal—consumed in the States of Minnesota, Wisconsin, the Dakotas, and even some parts of the more distant Northwest, so that it is of more than a local significance whether they are conducting their affairs in a proper way.

I have no complaint, and have heard of none, with respect to the general conduct of their business. The city of Two Harbors is located at the head of the lakes. It is a city of about five or six thousand people and is chiefly important because of its railroad terminals and lake shipping. For the education of some of the gentlemen from big places, I beg to say that the city of Two Harbors has a tonnage vessel commerce greater than the combined vessel commerce of Galveston, Tex.; New Orleans, La.; Mobile, Ala.; and Pensacola, Fla.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. When the gentleman makes that statement, he means that the coastwise commerce of Two Harbors is greater than the combined foreign commerce of these other cities?

Mr. MILLER. I did not make any such reservation or restriction.

Mr. MANN. Then, the gentleman will find, when he investigates, that he is mistaken.

Mr. MILLER. I will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that my figures were given me by the board of engineers of the War Department, who furnished them some time ago.

Mr. MANN. That is just it, and the board of engineers furnished the coastwise commerce for the Great Lakes and the foreign commerce for the seaports.

Mr. MILLER. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have been over that so often that I can assure the gentleman that I am not mistaken about it.

Mr. MILLER. Some gentleman here asked what is the comparison with Chicago. I should say that Chicago has 14,000,000 tons, and Two Harbors has 12,000,000 tons, so that Chicago has a little the better of it by 2,000,000 tons. But that is neither here nor there. The city of Two Harbors desired to purchase coal in wholesale quantities, and retail the same to her citizens. The companies refused to sell coal to the city for that purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the passage of the resolution?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserved the right to object upon this bill, and I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman is going to object, then I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXCHANGE OF SCHOOL LAND.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 19344) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange lands for school sections within an Indian, military, national forest, or other reservation, and for other purposes, be passed over until the next unanimous-consent day, without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. Has not that bill gone off the calendar once before?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; and it could not come back without this consent.

Mr. MANN. I shall not object to it.

Mr. RAKER. I know that it is unusual, but the conditions are such that I am impelled to try and get it back on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. PAYNE to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Walter H. Burnett, Sixty-first Congress, third session, no adverse report having been made thereon.

DAM ACROSS WHITE RIVER, ARK.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On account of some apprehension that the appointment of conferees earlier to-day upon the bill H. R. 20347 might not have been regular, the Chair again appoints the following conferees on the part of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ADAMSON, Mr. RICHARDSON, and Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills and joint resolution:

H. R. 20738. An act for the transfer of the so-called Olmstead lands in the State of North Carolina from the Solicitor of the Treasury to the Secretary of Agriculture;

H. R. 23515. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 20628. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. J. Res. 331. Joint resolution extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under certain contingencies.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. YOUNG of Texas, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. DOREMUS, for 10 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. NEEDHAM, for two weeks, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURRAY. My point of order is that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up a bill (S. 7027) on the Speaker's table to prevent the shipping through the mails and in interstate commerce of moving-picture films of prize fights, especially the one between a negro and a white man, to be held in New Mexico on the 4th of July next, and the point of order is made by the gentleman from Massachusetts to defeat the present consideration of that bill, as it will be too late to get it passed before that date if not considered now.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is sustained. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, it is evident that there is not a quorum present and that a quorum could not be obtained this afternoon. Therefore I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Tuesday, July 2, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, calling attention to provisions of S. 4239 and recommending that appropriations for the support of the Army, Army Schools, and the Rifle Practice Board be excepted from said provisions for the fiscal year 1913 (H. Doc. No. 856); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting petition of George T. Hale for himself and other assistants to superintendents of construction in the United States Life-Saving Service, praying for certain legislation in his and their behalf (H. Doc. No. 857); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting petition of P. Julian Latham for himself and other assistants to superintendents of construction in the United States Life-Saving Service, praying for certain legislation in his and their behalf (H. Doc. No. 858); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered by be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate in the form of authority to allow and credit in the accounts of George W. Evans, chief disbursing clerk, Department of the Interior, certain items disbursed by him amounting to $529.90 (H. Doc. No. 855); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 25507) to authorize certain changes in homestead allotments of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians in Oklahoma, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 928), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 2, 1912.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

Mr. BACON took the chair as President pro tempore under the previous order of the Senate.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LIQUOR TRAFFIC AMONG INDIANS (S. DOC. NO. 868).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting an estimate for an increase in the appropriation for the suppression of the liquor traffic among Indians from $75,000 to $100,000, which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

COAL-MINING OPERATIONS IN WYOMING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 100) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit the continuation of coal-mining operations on certain lands in Wyoming, which was to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to allow the Owl Creek Coal Co. to continue the operation of the mine or mines upon any of the lands embraced in Lander, Wyo., coal entries No. 18 to 49, inclusive, until July 1, 1913, upon such conditions and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House and ask a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. SMOOT, Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, and Mr. CHAMBERLAIN conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution.

S. 5935. An act to fix the terms of the district court for the western district of Michigan;

S. 6946. An act authorizing the sale of certain lands in the Flathead Indian Reservation to the town of Roman, State of Montana, for the purposes of a public park and public-school site; and

S. J. Res. 111. Joint resolution to convey the thanks of Congress to Capt. Arthur Henry Rostron, and through him to the officers and crew of the steamship Carpathia, of the Cunard Line, for the prompt and heroic services rendered by them in rescuing 704 lives from the wreck of the steamship Titanic in the North Atlantic Ocean.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, each with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 4663. An act granting to the Washington-Oregon Corporation a right for an electric railroad and for telephone, telegraph, and electric transmission lines across the Vancouver Military Reservation, in the State of Washington;

S. 4862. An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to investigate and settle certain accounts, and for other purposes; and

S. 6380. An act to incorporate the American Hospital of Paris.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20347) to authorize the Dixie Power Co. to construct a dam across White River at or near Cotter, Ark., asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ADAMSON, Mr. RICHARDSON, and Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 18719. An act to authorize the State of Tennessee to sell school lands for educational purposes;

H. R. 24669. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make a survey and estimate of the cost of increasing the storm drainage system, as well as the sanitary sewer system of the city of Hot Springs, abutting the Hot Springs Reservation, Ark.;

H. J. Res. 321. Joint resolution relative to observance of Memorial Day; and

H. J. Res. 332. Joint resolution appropriating $1,350,000 for encampment and maneuvers for the Organized Militia.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a resolution adopted by the National Association of Piano Merchants of America, favoring the adoption of certain changes in the present currency law, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the National Association of Piano Merchants of America, favoring the enactment of legislation requiring manufacturers to place their own names upon manufactured articles, which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

He also presented the petition of A. Atlee, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the establishment of a national department of health, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BRISTOW presented a petition of sundry citizens of Belle Plains, Kans., praying for the establishment of a governmental system of postal express, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Solomon, Kans., praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CULLOM presented resolutions adopted by the Cook District Liquor Dealers' Protective Association, of Illinois, in convention at Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of Local Lodge No. 363, International Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Iron-Ship Builders and Helpers of America, of East St. Louis; of Bluff City Lodge, No. 660, International Association of Machinists, of Upper Alton; of Local Union No. 4, Stove Mounters' International Union, of Belleville; and of the Trades and Labor Assembly of Aurora, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the passage of the so-called injunction limitation bill, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Council of Grain Exchanges, in convention at Chicago, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for a uniform bill of lading, which were ordered to lie on the table.

GARDEN CITY (KANS.) WATER USERS' ASSOCIATION.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 6784) for the relief of Garden City (Kans.) Water Users' Association, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 900) thereon.

SCHOOL LANDS IN ARIZONA.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 7163) authorizing the State of Arizona to select lands within the former Fort Grant Military Reservation and outside of the Crook National Forest in partial satisfaction of its grant for State, charitable, penal, and reformatory institutions. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. ROOT. Is there a report with the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. There is no report accompanying it, but I will state to the Senator that the Fort Grant Military Reservation has been turned over to the Interior Department and we are selecting for the lands granted to us under the enabling act this particular piece of land for the purpose of establishing a reform school. The bill has been recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, and it is on his recommendation that the committee made a unanimous report in its favor.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Arizona if the amendment was made in accordance with the action of the committee?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Exactly as the committee agreed to it the bill was reprinted and it was so reported.

Mr. SMOOT. And it is approved of by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes; his letter of approval is here.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, what is before the Senate now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 7163, the title of which the Secretary will again read.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will ask the Chair how that comports with the unanimous-consent agreement which was made for to-day's business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that morning business has not yet closed. This bill has just been reported to the Senate, and in the act of reporting it the Senator from Arizona accompanied it with a request for present consideration. It was not called up from the calendar, but it is a part of the morning business. It is before the Senate in connection with the morning business, the report having been received this morning. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama:

A bill (S. 7223) to authorize the Secretary of War to lease the surplus water created by any improvement on navigable streams, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BRISTOW:

A bill (S. 7224) granting an increase of pension to Charles C. Littlefield (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 7225) granting a pension to Adam Ross (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GRONNA:

A bill (S. 7226) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Harrison (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. THORNTON:

A bill (S. 7227) for the relief of heirs or estate of Joseph Block, deceased (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $250,000 for increasing the capacity of the plant at Rock Island Arsenal for the production of Field Artillery material, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 25069), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

H. R. 18719. An act to authorize the State of Tennessee to sell school lands for educational purposes; and

H. R. 24069. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make a survey and estimate of the cost of increasing the storm drainage system, as well as the sanitary sewer system, of the city of Hot Springs, abutting the Hot Springs Reservation, Ark.

The following joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

H. J. Res. 321. Joint resolution relative to observance of Memorial Day; and

H. J. Res. 332. Joint resolution appropriating $1,350,000 for encampment and maneuvers for the Organized Militia.

THE CHEMICAL SCHEDULE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no concurrent or other resolutions the morning business is closed, and under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senate will proceed to the consideration of House bill 20182.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20182) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the bill has not yet been read, and the Chair awaits the pleasure of the Senate as to the procedure. The Chair will direct the bill to be read unless it is desired otherwise.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand that the bill has not been read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been read.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not understand that there is any requirement that the bill should be read at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is none. The only time when a bill is required to be read is upon its passage.

Mr. HEYBURN. In the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the Senate, it having already been informally read twice.

Mr. HEYBURN. And it will be informally read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will conform to whatever may be the desire of the Senate in this regard. There is no rule to that effect, but it is the usual custom to read a bill unless some motion is made to the contrary.

Mr. HEYBURN. I presume that on the request of a Senator the bill would be read, but inasmuch as we are not desirous to-day of killing time I certainly should not make that request. But I would inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill whether or not he desires to take up the amendments suggested by the minority of the committee? I notice that there are some amendments suggested in the views of the minority.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think probably it is just as well to take up the bill as a whole at this time.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would think so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the Senator from Idaho has the floor.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, in considering Schedule A, the chemical and paint schedule of the tariff act, it is not my intention to speak at length, and I trust not in a tiresome manner. I am not going to deal in long tables or figures. I am going to discuss some general principles that are especially applicable in view of the pronounced policy of the Republican Party at Chicago a few days since. We have now a definite rule for tariff legislation.

I want to suggest to Senators, with the permission of the Chair, that inasmuch as it would not be practicable or fair to suggest the absence of a quorum, that they make it unnecessary to do so and be indulgent with those who are willing to give their energy and their efforts to a brief discussion of this question. Ordinarily we have rules which we can invoke, but unfortunately we have not now, and no one cares to speak that which would be as well written because of the absence of auditors. I merely make this suggestion, because we are under peculiar conditions here this morning. If we were forced to it by any disposition to treat this subject and those discussing it with less consideration than they are entitled to, we might call for a quorum. I merely make this suggestion.

I am not speaking merely for the purpose of speaking. We have to meet this question in a campaign that is about to begin, and I give notice to Senators that, if they persist in absenting themselves, I shall call for a quorum, and they might as well take notice of it.

The reason given by the minority for pressing this legislation is found on page 19 of the House report on "Schedule A—Chemicals, Oils, and Paints," made by the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means. They have taken the trouble to set out under the head "Reason for reductions" the following statement:

A special reason for reducing rates of duty on many of the crude chemical products is found in the fact that their bulk and low unit of cost will not permit of their being moved except under very favorable conditions. The United States imports some of the products shown in Table 10, because while we have abundant supplies it is less expensive to import them from other countries than to install plants or resort to the processes of saving the by-products necessary to introduce the industry here.

They give that as their reason. It is the most unique reason that I have ever seen given for the performance of a public duty—that because it is more convenient to allow these products to be made abroad or to be produced abroad we will not undertake to promote their production at home. I am very much surprised that any great party, speaking through its representatives, should have been candid enough to confess that they were perfectly willing to destroy these interests in America on the sole ground of convenience.

Of course it would be more convenient for the Members of Congress, most of them, to stay at home—and less expensive to the Government in some ways—and not legislate at all, to allow the foreigner to come into the port under his own flag, in his own ship, bring in the products of his own country, take possession of our wharves and warehouses, and sell those products here to those who would buy. That is the rule of convenience. I have never heard it urged before as a legitimate reason for legislation, but that is the reason they give. So we must conclude that they have no other or better reason than that put out in the report of the majority of the Ways and Means Committee.

While it may make little difference to the auditors present, I do not want that there shall be any mistake on the part of those who read the RECORD of the consideration of this question, because I shall use it throughout the campaign, and there I shall have an audience; do not make any mistake about that. I shall use it as the principle upon which this legislation is proposed and enacted, and it will be heard and considered by hundreds of thousands of people—American citizens—determining how they will elect to cast their votes.

I am going to read it again, because it is unique. Such a concession never was made before by any political party. I read:

A special reason for reducing rates of duty on many of the crude chemical products is found in the fact that their bulk and low unit of cost will not permit of their being moved except under very favorable conditions. The United States imports some of the products shown in Table 10, because while we have abundant supplies it is less expensive to import them from other countries than to install plants or resort to the processes of saving the by-products necessary to introduce the industry here.

That is being spoken of a schedule that represents an output of $1,500,000,000 every year. It is dealt with on the rule of convenience. That is being spoken of a product that used in raw material, which they treat so cavalierly here, $900,000,000 in the year 1911; that is being spoken of an item of wages of $240,000,000 a year; that is being spoken of factories making these articles that employ within the factories 12,000 people, and, in connection with the product of the things the factory uses, 300,000 people. That is from their own report. I take those figures from the report, and they are correct, for I have compared them with the statistics of the Government; yet they say that because the United States imports some of the products shown in Table 10—that is the table I am speaking of—while we have abundant supplies—that is, we have those things susceptible of being produced—it is less expensive to import them from other countries, you know, than to install plants. That means making machinery, constructing buildings, employing men, and that kind of expenditure—or resort to the processes of saving the by-products—

And so forth.

That is, by saving the item of $900,000,000. We have to deal with that kind of a question this morning, and we are going to vote on it, I suppose, directly. I intend that those things shall go out to the country through the medium of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and, at a proper time, through other mediums that will reach a larger percentage of the people.

While our output is $1,500,000,000 in these articles, we imported in 1911 only $48,868,368 worth; so the foreign trade is kept at the minimum. It has not varied 10 per cent in 10 years; it has been held there by reason of the tariff laws of our country, which are now proposed to be changed; but changed how? Articles valued at $42,000,000, consisting principally of raw material and of articles not produced in this country, came in last year. They estimate that they will collect on those articles on the basis of $38,812,000. That is not a material difference in the volume of the imports. They say they will collect $3,364,000.65, and for that they would make a change involving an entire schedule and hold the Senate here for the consideration of that kind of legislation.

In 1911 the value of the imports under this schedule that came in free was $61,110,766, and the value of those that came in under the dutiable clauses was $33,390,000; so that about two-thirds came in free and one-third was dutiable; and yet, for the reasons given in the report, we are to consider a change of the schedule, not that it will bring in more duty, but that it will transfer the free list to the dutiable list.

They say in the abstract that they are opposed to taxes of this kind. They call it a "tax," and yet they are doubling the taxes, or they are proposing to do so. Of course, they will not do it because the Senate will not permit them to do it, but that is what they are proposing to do. We often judge men—and we may always judge parties—by what they propose to do. It is not necessary to wait for the realization of their promise; if they propose to do a thing, we will take it for granted that they would do it.

This has been a growing industry in this country. In 1900—and that is not very long ago—there were 8,820 establishments manufacturing the articles covered by the chemical schedule. Five years later the number had grown to 9,689, and in 1910 to 11,863 establishments engaged in manufacturing under this schedule.

The capital invested in 1900 was $1,180,000,000; in 1905, $1,521,000,000; and in 1910, $2,053,000,000. This business had doubled in 10 years. I will say, in passing, that I am not giving the odd figures; I am giving the master figures of the column.

The value of the product of these factories in the United States in 1900 was $757,000,000; in 1905 it had grown to $1,056,000,000; and in 1910 to $1,479,000,000. So that it is not a dead enterprise. It grew thus because of the legislation that protected the industry. It did not and would not have grown under this hoity-toity statement that "Oh, they are small things; let them come in. Do not notice them as they come through the customhouses; they are too trifling."

In 1900 the salaried officers engaged in this business numbered 34,564, at a compensation of $37,253,000. In 1905 that item had increased from 34,564 to 45,442. In 1910 it had increased to 68,756, at a compensation of $81,037,000, because of the growth of an industry that owed its growth entirely to the discriminating protection that kept out the foreign product.

In 1900 the total average number of wage earners engaged in this enterprise was 185,515, and their wages amounted to $73,349,687; in 1910 the number of wage earners had increased from 185,515 to 242,961, and the wages amounted to $116,214,000. The wages had increased nearly double, and the number of employees had increased about 30 per cent. That is not a long period.

The raw material used in these factories in 1900 had a value of $453,410,783, in 1905 of $629,609,000, and in 1910 of $903,920,000. I am reading these figures to show the growth of this industry, and, of course, the conditions surrounding it must have had something to do with its growth, because the growth of the industry is all out of proportion and in excess of the proportion of the growth of the population of the country.

There are other items which, added together, amount in the aggregate to a considerable sum to be added to those I have given, but I do not intend, as I have said, to go extensively into the tables.

In this bill they propose to transfer from the free list to the dutiable list 80 items, and those 80 items represent about one-half of the imports to this country. The value of imports in the items that are transferred from the free list to the dutiable list amounted to $42,337,887 in 1911. They estimate that under this bill the imports will be $38,812,150 and the duties will be $3,464,065. That involves no material increase in benefits to the customhouse, but is a transfer of items that we do not produce and can not produce to the dutiable list in violation of the principles that they have professed throughout generations. That is to be taken in connection with the reasons which they give on page 19 of the report for the proposition contained in the proposed legislation.

On page 16 of their report they put the interests of the consumer first. That is rather a unique proposition. I want this to go into the RECORD.

At the top of page 16 they say under the caption "Consumer's interests":

> In its revision of Schedule A the committee has also endeavored to give careful consideration to the interest of the consumer. Although the duties on chemicals have a less direct relation to the prices of fully finished products than is the case with many other goods, yet in some instances the rates have an important direct bearing upon prices paid by the consumer.

That is an erroneous principle. The consumer is not to be given the first consideration in legislating, because the consumer may have nothing to consume. The order of importance, if we are to divide industries and the people engaged in industries into classes, would seem to me to be, first, the farmer. I include under that designation all classes of people who produce the things that grow in the earth or on the earth for the comfort and sustenance of mankind. The farmer produces the foodstuffs and the raw material. Of course no other person is interested in what he consumes. He consumes of his own product and adds nothing to the wealth of any other person, but he is of first importance.

There could be no cities without farmers. Bear that in mind. There could be no communities, other than those composed of farmers, without farmers. So the farmer is to be given the first place and not the consumer, as is said on page 16 of the report. The consumer does not exist until after the producer has come into existence, and when you protect the producer you make it possible for the consumer to be protected and to exist.

So I put the farmer first. I place his interest first in considering tariff legislation. Take him out of the category and there is nobody else to protect. There would be no iron furnaces nor spinning mills without the farmer. All the farmer has to do to stop them or control them is to rest the plow in the furrow, sit under the shade of the tree, and eat the product of his own garden and of his own stockyard. There would not be a wheel turned in the factory nor a furnace lighted except for this element of the community. That should be borne in mind. I mention it because the minority of the committee, in its report, has placed the consumer first and the producer last. It barely mentions the producer; in fact, I do not think it saw him clearly. It saw him as through a glass, darkly.

The man of next importance is not the consumer, but the distributor, because if these products remained where they are produced they never would reach anyone outside of the producer. The second largest item for consideration in tariff legislation or in any legislation affecting the prosperity of the people is that of distribution; and that is a big question. It includes the men who haul in their little huckster wagons and deliver to the consumers. It includes the great transportation companies of the country that carry in quantity that which is produced in local centers. It is one of the big questions to be taken into consideration. It is just as important when we are dealing with distribution that we consider the smallest as it is that we consider the largest, because it is distribution that connects the producer with the consumer. There would be no consumers except the producers if it were not for the means of distribution and for the distributors. That has very close application to a schedule of this kind. No ordinary consumer could go to the place of production and secure the benefits of production at all. He would not know where to go. The distances would be prohibitive.

So in classifying these people I place them in that order: First, the producer; second, the distributor; then, the producer of raw material, because without the producer of raw material there would be no wage-earning class in this country. You must have raw material to run any foundry or factory or machine shop, and you must apply the law to the production of raw material as the item third in importance.

This schedule reverses that rule. It creates a false premise; and when you start out with your face in the wrong direction you are not apt to reach the desired destination. To be sure, these questions are familiar to all Members of this body. This is a body of men selected because of their capacity to understand these questions and because of the fact that they do understand them. When we talk here about these questions that may seem academic, it is not that we hope to turn men in their trend of thought, but it is that we speak through this medium to the country that is affected by and interested in this matter. The country expects us to send out the true ring of the true gospel, and it is our duty to do it; otherwise we might as well meet in executive session or write letters to each other.

There are three classes that have been completely ignored in this report—not ignored through oversight, but ignored specifically by substituting some other class for them. So it can not be charged as a mere difference of opinion or oversight; but they have deliberately substituted the wrong persons in classifying those for whom this legislation is intended, and the country should know it; otherwise the country is apt to start from wrong premises—otherwise the country is apt, with its face pointed in the opposite direction, to go astray.

You can make no greater mistake than to believe that the people do not think, that they do not follow these questions. I have no doubt it is the experience of every other Member of this body, when he goes out and is no longer addressed in his official capacity, that he finds that all communities are considering and thinking and talking about these questions. They are not all right, but they are all seeking for the light.

I have heard as interesting discussion of some of these questions in the last three weeks out in local communities as you would hear upon this floor. Many of them started off with false premises. There are certain newspapers that seem to have become popular in some sections of the country that have been preaching false doctrine, and these people excusably take it as a text.

A few days ago some men were talking on the street corner in the midst of one of the most prosperous sections of the State of Pennsylvania. They were sure they were right, and they were denouncing everything that exists and demanding everything that is dangerous. I said to them: "Where do you get these ideas? Where do you get the basis for such statements?" "Why," they said, "from the North American." The North American had insidiously wormed itself into that community and spread venom like a poisonous snake, and those people were mistaking it for the source of wisdom.

That is just as dangerous and as venomous as the things I spoke of yesterday. It leads whole communities astray. When they find, though, with a little careful consideration, that they are wrong, they do not hesitate to turn; but sometimes it is too late. Sometimes it is after election day. Up in the State of Pennsylvania the knowledge came too late. But the knowledge now is spreading itself from mind to mind and house to house. I am hearing from some of it, and they are thinking. What they want is the truth as the basis of thought, and, while they may be longer in arriving at the truth, they will get there. It is not a case of permanent insanity; only one of temporary aberration of mind.

I have considered this statement in the report in its relation to the first three classes of American citizenship. I am not here with my heart filled with pity or sympathy for the laboring classes of other countries. That is a question for missionaries and not for statesmen.

I now come to the class termed manufacturers—that is, those who combine wages with raw material and produce things for man's use. Those are manufacturers. Their work makes a market for the raw material, it makes a market for the labor, and it enlarges the scope of individual and personal civilization. But now we come to the confluence of the streams. When you reach the manufacturer you have reached the point where these streams come together and constitute consumers and producers, because all that we produce in this country that is not sent abroad is consumed by those identified with the manufacture of raw materials into finished products, excepting only that consumed by the producers of raw materials. There is your situation. They start separate streams, as the fingers of your hand, and at the wrist they form that great, mighty stream of American industry and enterprise that is composed of the producer of raw material, those who convert it into a finished product, and those who use it. They are the united result of the separate enterprises. Every one of them is a consumer in kind, to be considered not separate and apart, but as an indispensable part of the other.

The first—that is to say, the farmer, the tiller of the soil—can live and prosper without any of the others. Mark that. The farmer, the tiller of the soil, can live and prosper and be a good citizen without any other element of the people. We have only to remember back within our own lifetimes to know it. We have only to go up in the old garrets and see the spinning wheels and the looms there to know that the ancestors who landed upon this continent and made their homes in the timber built their own looms, made their own spinning wheels, raised their own flax, and converted it into clothing for the family. They raised things to eat; they raised the local stock that constituted the winter's supply of food; and they were as complete a civilization and a governmental power as the richest and strongest nation of the earth.

So I say that you can eliminate the manufacturer, you can eliminate every other class of citizen, and have a perfect and concrete and happy government of men based upon their possession and use of the soil. Then what follows? In legislating upon this or any other subject involved in tariff legislation to classify the very top and crown of human kind at the end of the list, to be considered only if we have time after the day's work is done or perhaps not be reached during the day. The great majority of the errors into which the people fall, the hysteria that marks the proceedings of caucuses and conventions, the mistakes in legislation and in government, result from misapprehension upon this question, from error in classification of those for whom we are legislating.

It was told of a man who had been a noted street-corner orator on political questions, who made much noise and dealt in high-sounding phrase, that finally, in order to quiet him, they sent him to the legislature. He knew the word "legislature"; he did not know how to spell it, but they sent him there. After he had been guided through the preliminary steps of taking an oath of office and being assigned to a seat he looked around and said, "Now, what will I do?" "You are here to legislate." "Well, what is legislating?" "Legislating is making laws." "What laws?" And so on. It illustrates the fact that you must know what you are going to do when you come into a hall of legislation. You want to know who your client is, who is your constituent. Unless you do know you go blind, like that poor fellow did in the legislature, without knowing why he was there or what purpose he was to serve.

We are here to legislate primarily for those who occupy the soil, for the masters, the masters of business, large and small, the masters of the cities, the masters of the banks and the railroads, and everything, that would starve in a week if the soil were to cease to produce. They would not know what to do with the soil if they were placed upon it. They would not know how to plow it, how to plant it, or how to reap it. They are not only helpless in the sense that they depend upon it for the sustenance of life, but helpless because they do not understand it, and would not know how to use it.

Now, Mr. President, we come to those who are to receive the especial consideration under this report, the consumers' interests. I have read the first half of the paragraph. I will now read the last half of it:

> The general changes proposed in the duties on the articles included in these paragraphs by H. R. 20182 are such as to reduce the burden of prices resting upon the consumer, as far as possible, with due regard for necessary revenue from the schedule.

There is no provision there for reasonable profits to the producer. It is only the consumer who is to be considered. They are proposing that there shall be due regard to revenue, but there is no mention of the producer. You are going to sacrifice him. They say in their report that these imports will increase the next year from $47,000,000 to $96,000,000. What does that mean? It means that you are going to substitute the difference between $47,000,000 and $96,000,000 by allowing the foreigner to displace that much in our fields of production. It is like the process that took place in the pine trees in Colorado. Great giant pines fell to the ground ages, perhaps not many, ago and were brought in contact with certain solutions which substituted silica for wood fiber and made what we call petrified trees. Substitute the silica of foreign labor and raw material for the wood fiber of American labor and American material and you will have petrified America.

The process will be the same. I have seen those giant trees lie there. When you come to break one of them open and examine them you find that the original intention of the Creator in growing that tree has been displaced; you have a rock. You ask for bread and you get a rock, a petrified tree. You can not build a house out of it, and you can not build a wall out of it either, if petrified.

We are saving up a large amount of forest petrified in time, when we are gone, conserving it. In place of the picture of cities and homes made of those forests you will find the petrifaction of inactivity and solitude. I just say that in passing.

But I was reading the second part of this paragraph. I was calling attention to the fact that no mention is made of the producer. He must work and slave and toil and produce things in order that the consumer may sit around and consume them and growl about high prices. I have not heard the producer talk about prices being too high for his corn or his wheat or his cattle. I have only heard those who would disregard him and his rights complain that he does not work cheaply enough for them, that he asks the right to live on a basis established by himself and not by somebody else.

Now, they proceed to say:

> This has been brought about by expanding—

That is, this condition that they deplore—

> by expanding classifications and by alterations in the rates of duty.

Then they proceed with the statements, and they are most interesting. I have spent many hours over this report, and I find it as interesting a document as ever was written under the caption of a novel. It reminded me last night when I thought of it as I was reading it in the night, that if you would start out to write a poem about the lark and describe the crow you would about strike the gait of this report.

I wish it might be possible for that report to go out among the people who would read it and get at the true inwardness of this proposed change in the schedules, the substitution of a free list by a dutiable list upon articles none of which we produce or can produce at all.

They say they are in favor of tariff for revenue. I say they say it; I do not know whether they will say it or not. I notice they start to say it, and some of them interrupt them, and they have not yet reached a conclusion. But the Republican Party has spoken.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understood the Senator to express a wish that the report might go out and obtain wide circulation. Will the Senator suggest how many copies he would agree to have printed and circulated?

Mr. HEYBURN. You mean pay for being printed? I would not charge the people for the use of the people's property for the benefit of the people.

Mr. SIMMONS. I thought the Senator in the interest of the public, from his standpoint, would be willing to bear the small expense of printing, and I asked how many copies of the report he would like to have printed.

Mr. HEYBURN. That reminds me——

Mr. SIMMONS. I hope the Senator will make a motion for the printing and circulation of a great many copies of that report.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will be very willing to see it go out just as we vaccinate the public against certain diseases, to send it out under the appropriation we were discussing yesterday of some hundreds of thousands of dollars for the raw material to prevent the disease.

In reference to the cost of sending it to the people, I hear so much about charging the people for that which belongs to them, I will state that I had a letter this morning from one of the departments in reply to a request that a certain document be sent to one of my constituents.

They gave the price at which it could be obtained. It was printed at public expense. It is the property of the people and ought to be free to them, because it pertains to questions the Government is arrogating to itself the right to investigate. Yet those people have to pay for it. Of course that condition should not exist. That is the result of cheeseparing and small minds or small minds engaged in cheeseparing. They are trying to make a reputation as economists, and they think if they can show that they save $19.12 by making their masters pay them for that which they have already paid for, some one will commend them.

I was proceeding to say that we had not heard from Baltimore in regard to the rule of revenue except about such sounds as I heard coming from a neighboring room a bit ago where you would hear a word here and there. But there is a declaration before the country by the master organization.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. I should like to have a moment to say that while all our eyes are turned on Baltimore, when the tariff plank is announced there it will be hailed with delight, and will be just what the American people are seeking, and for which they will vote.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was unfortunate in not catching all that the Senator said. His voice was dropped.

Mr. ASHURST. The distinguished Senator from Idaho spoke of Baltimore. I simply rose, with his kind permission, to say that when the result shall finally have been announced, the tariff plank of the platform written there will be hailed with delight throughout the country, and it will call for a downward revision, a promise which, unlike the Payne-Aldrich promise, will be kept.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is sweet music in my ears. I am very fond of reading the old prophets; it is one of my chief delights. I never stop to inquire whether or not the prophecies were fulfilled; the sound of prophecy is a charming thing.

Now, here is the seventh plank in the platform of the great Republican Party. I use the words "great Republican Party" because I do not refer to any offshoots. I mean the party which spoke at Chicago, which spoke, and did not sit silent at Chicago, and whose platform is now before us as a responsible rule of action. A few weeks ago when I spoke in this Chamber upon the tariff question I could only speak on the basis of the past, four years old or more, and what had been done under it, but now by authority——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator. The Senator says that part of the Republican Party which spoke——

Mr. HEYBURN. No; not that part.

Mr. SIMMONS. Not that which remained silent. Can the Senator give information to the Senate and the country as to what proportion spoke and what proportion remained silent?

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator has added something to my expression. I did not say that part, because any that remained silent were no part of the Republican Party. I referred to something real and not something that might have been hidden in the darkness.

Now, let us hear the gospel of protection and tariff legislation. I read the seventh plank in the platform, the heading of which is—

Stand on tariff—

That does not mean tread on it and stamp on it; it means stand on it as a foundation—

We reaffirm our belief in a protective tariff—

A protective tariff; not one for revenue—

The Republican tariff policy has been of the greatest benefit to the country, developing our resources, diversifying our industries, and protecting our workingmen against competition with cheaper labor abroad, thus establishing for our wage earners the American standard of living.

That is the crux of it—"the American standard of living." You need no lead pencil to find out what that means. You do not have to telegraph to Berlin or London or Paris to find out what the cost of producing a lead pencil is this morning in order that you may fix the duty to be collected upon it at the customhouse this morning. I will proceed:

The protective tariff is so woven into the fabric of our industrial and agricultural life that to substitute for it a tariff for revenue only would destroy many industries and throw millions of our people out of employment.

That statement is based upon a foundation of facts as stern and stanch as Gibraltar. It will stand no chipping or whittling or sophistry or pretense of reason. I proceed:

The products of the farm and of the mine should receive the same measure of protection as other products of American labor.

That is a raw-material declaration. No party that sends that out upon its banner can ever support a proposition of free raw material. I am glad to see it; I congratulate those who are responsible for the utterance. I proceed:

We hold that the import duties should be high enough, while yielding sufficient revenue, to protect adequately American industries and wages.

"High enough." That means above the boot tops. An 18-inch boot top will not keep your feet dry in 20 inches of water. It means that the tariff is to be "high enough," so that there is no danger of splashing over; so that there is no cheeseparing about it; no whittling down to see how close you can cut the producer to the quick without drawing blood, and, if you draw blood, how you can best stanch its flow. That is the kind of condition with which we have been confronted in the discussion of the tariff question here for many months since that unfortunate expression, upon which an unfortunate interpretation was placed, crept into our declaration of principles. Even in the most solemn hour among men a little levity will creep in. Following that is—

Some of the existing import duties are too high and should be reduced.

I suppose that really got caught and tangled in the fringe of this work as it was brought out from the loom in which it was woven. That is all I can say for it. As I said yesterday, I presume that is true of some items. I mentioned two yesterday. Perhaps the duty may be too high on curled feathers and beeswax or some little things like those. I might be willing to enter into council for the consideration of that question; but it is not too high to protect earnest, responsible enterprise, individual and collective. A free trader would laugh at a provision that would undertake in such terms to qualify the great statement that preceded it. I proceed:

Readjustment should be made from time to time to conform to changing conditions and to reduce excessive rates, but without injury to any American industry.

That is to say, under the rule above stated, but not by schedule, not by nipping in here and there. That platform does not mean to favor revision by schedule. I am going throughout this country during the campaign making that declaration, and no member of the committee that made that platform will dare controvert it or claim for a moment that that is a declaration in favor of revision by schedule, because the Republican Party the last time it spoke responsibly condemned in explicit and unmeasured terms revision by schedule. The Democratic platform in the same campaign expressly declared in favor of revision by schedule. I make this statement thus early in order that I may lay the foundation upon which I shall rest whatever argument I may make to the people of this country that that is not a declaration in favor of revision by schedule, but that, on the contrary, it is a declaration in favor of the revision of the tariff as a whole, in order that there may be that harmony in the work of revision that insures fair treatment to all, all being considered at the same time and parties to the same decree. If during the campaign I hear anyone claim that that is a declaration in favor of revision by schedule, I shall take issue with him; and the Republican Party and the Republicans will be in harmony with me and will sustain my position. We are not going to turn Democrats at this time or at any other. When you favor revision by schedule you have turned Democrats, because they declared for it and the Republicans declared against it.

I see saner days ahead in the Republican Party; I see a braver spirit to stand up against the tremor and fright of the threats of the enemy; I see sterner warfare, where the noise and the smells of the army of China will no longer frighten or stampede civilization.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Republican Party in 1908 defined what it meant by protection. It stated that industries were entitled to be protected to the extent of the difference between the cost of production here and elsewhere, plus a reasonable profit. I judge from what the Senator from Idaho has just said—I have not read the platform of his party very carefully—that the recent Republican convention abandoned that definition of protection. I should like to ask the Senator whether that is because the party has lost confidence in its definition of 1908 or because of the report of the Tariff Board?

Mr. HEYBURN. It was because of a misuse and misapplication of the statement that had been made in the discussion of tariff legislation; that is why. It never was intended for a moment that the platform of 1908 should change the principle of protection. There was a little scare on the part of certain individuals who thought unless they could get some Democratic votes—and I do not speak of the Presidency—they perhaps could not win; that they perhaps could not be reelected or continue to hold their offices. They tried the experiment of seeing if they could not look like Democrats until they got past the tellers, in order that they might be counted as such. That is about the size of it; and we caught them at it. We found that they attempted to use it in the discussion of the tariff question in violation of the real principles upon which the party had stood. The Republican Party in its greatest platform in recent years announced the doctrine that the revision of the tariff should not be made, except after such lengthened intervals as would represent changed conditions and make it obviously necessary, and they closed with the words "and let it stand thus."

In my judgment, we had upon the committee on resolutions, which drafted the platform at Chicago a few weeks ago some Republicans who knew how to be Republicans, what it was to be Republicans, and how to express Republican sentiment, for which I thank God in the interest of good government and in the interest of the continuance in power of the party of principle.

I reread that:

> Readjustment should be made from time to time to conform to changing conditions and to reduce excessive rates, but without injury to any American industry.

That does not mean without injury alone to the large aggregations of business and capital. It says any interest or any industry. That means the individual who works at his loom to-day alone in his own house or the aggregation of men and capital where thousands of spindles hum. It means the man who has his little forge up in a valley that I have in mind, who makes plows and axes and implements for the farm, as he did or as his father did, to my recollection, 50 years ago. It means that man as much as it means the United States Steel Corporation or any other aggregation of capital. It means the person who has not yet reached manhood——

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. The Senator from Idaho said a few minutes since that the Republican Party was opposed to the revision of the tariff, schedule by schedule.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. If my memory serves me correctly, the present President of the United States heartily recommended that method of revision.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I spoke of the Republican Party. No man is the Republican Party. I do not derogate from the respect and credit that I give the President of the United States; but the Republican Party is made up of the Republicans of the country, and it is greater than anything less than every man who is a Republican. I do not intend to cast any aspersion or to be led into any debate that would involve any action of the President. Presidents are selected because they are wise, but not because they are allwise; they are selected for the average of wisdom which they can bring to the performance of their duties, without the expectation that there will never arise an occasion to differ from them. Criticism of the acts of a President should be couched in respectful language and expressed in a respectful manner, because Presidents are chosen by all the people, and respect or respectful treatment in dealing with them is only respectful treatment or respect to the whole people, not necessarily to one individual.

Mr. President, so much for the responsible gospel of Republicanism. There are many other provisions in that platform. There are 30 planks in it, every one of which could be eliminated except that one, and leave a perfect code of government for the party. The others deal with things that come and go; they pass into legislation and out of it without creating more than a local ripple; but the great business problem of the Government is involved in the tariff plank, as it is involved in tariff legislation. It represents the balance of trade between the American people as a whole and the rest of the world; not between some selected malefactor and the world, but between the people as a whole and the world. When we take the books of the customhouse at the end of the year and ascertain by the subtraction of one side of the ledger from the other that we have taken in more money than we have paid out or paid out more than we have taken in, we have the problem of the prosperity of the people as a whole. One man may not have shared equally in this division of business; but I am speaking of the American people. There is the rule. That is the rule that governs a business man. At the end of the year he strikes a balance for the purpose of determining whether or not he has taken in more than he has paid out. If he has paid out more than he has taken in, he is that much to the bad; if he has paid out less than he has taken in, he is that much to the good. The rule applies to individuals and to aggregations of individuals, and that is the tariff, and nothing but the tariff. That balance of trade is influenced by the tariff. If he might not export, he would have no market for his surplus; if he might not import, it would make no difference to him as to the value or cost of things abroad. We regulate those things by the Constitution of the United States in the one case and in the other by the often-changing law.

In the question of the balance of trade in commodities the Government has no interest whatever; it is neither affected one way or the other, except as the citizens are affected. The Government, through its customhouses, leading into its Treasury, is affected in the revenues derived from imports and other sources. The people are not benefited at all by them. Oftentimes they fail to distinguish between the two ledgers—the ledger of the Government and the ledger of the people. Until the people have produced a surplus, they can not make a dollar, except as they mine it from the ground.

The buying and selling between individuals at home neither adds to nor takes from the wealth of the people as a whole; but if the Government, through the levying of discriminating duties, influences the sum of money spent by our people for purchases abroad, there the two streams converge. We get commodities for the money we spend abroad, and presumably consume them; but they add nothing to the wealth of the people.

Mr. President, this bill is confessedly without purpose. No demand was made for this proposed legislation; no claim was made that there was a need of more revenues or increased revenues through the customhouses. It is true that those on the other side of this question have declared their intention of rendering it unnecessary to collect anything at the customhouses; they have declared their intention of substituting other sources of revenue sufficient to maintain the Government; they have declared their intention of substituting such items as I find in the financial statement of the Treasury Department; and this sounds so much like a joke, in view of the discussion of the question upon this floor, as to make it interesting as well as amusing.

The prophecies that were indulged in as to the amount of money that would be realized from the corporation tax would make some Members rather bashful if you would open the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and call their attention to the speeches and prophecies. The Treasury statement issued on June 29 shows that for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1912, there had been collected $28,583,103.90 under the corporation tax. How does that sound as compared with the figures upon which that legislation was procured? It could not have been procured upon any such showing as that. No one would have stopped long enough to give it thought or to support it. It was conceived in a spirit of vengeance and wrought out in a spirit of frenzy. The corporation tax was going to render it unnecessary any longer to levy protective duties, or even revenue duties, at the customhouses. We collected last year at the customhouses $311,257,347.86; and on account of this item, the corporation tax—and so that it may appear in conjunction with the customs duties I will restate the amount—we collected $28,583,103.90.

Now they are proposing another class of taxation. It amounts to an occupation tax, a personal tax. They would substitute a system of personal taxation to make up a large part of the difference between $28,000,000 and $311,000,000; and that is one of the arguments they use. I see a vacant seat over there from which I heard the statement made when we were discussing the last revenue bill that it would not be difficult for the Government legitimately to collect enough taxes through these extraordinary means of local taxation to make it unnecessary to keep open the customhouses. I heard one Member say that he would close every customhouse in the United States and undertake to provide revenues to run this Government.

We have had now more than a year—nearly two years—of actual experience, and there is the result. It was supposed that there would be collected from corporations—and they were so classified as to eliminate all smaller corporations—at least half enough money in the beginning to pay the running expenses of the Government. That I speak of as against the general proposition of changing and shifting our revenue laws with the idea that you are going to eliminate the necessity for a protective-tariff duty. We already bring into this country free about the same amount of merchandise as we import under duty. They are fairly divided.

Mr. President, we are facing both a theory and a condition this morning. We have the theory I have referred to that the Government should be run by local taxation. We have a condition which shows that all the attempts in that direction which have been made have been utterly futile and based upon nothing. The condition is the result of the theory, and we must get rid of both condition and theory. We have too many theorists who theorize without any experience upon which to base their theories. We want to disregard them and eliminate them entirely from the consideration of this question.

The best way to get rid of a theorist is to give him his way and he will explode. It will be a case of spontaneous combustion if you just give him his way, but it is an expensive thing to do. We know the remedy is all right, but it is like many physical remedies—they carry with them an element of danger. The man who is always wanting change and wanting something new is a dangerous man. Our lunatic asylums are filled with those men. I suppose half the people of demented condition to-day are those who imagine they have a panacea for the ills of others. None of them having succeeded they become obsessed with the idea, and go on and on until they land over on the hill.

Just place responsibility upon one of those men and that is the end of him, because he is not able to live up to it; he is not able to make good. He will tell you how he can do this and that, but just put the responsibility on him and you are through with him. But that is another expensive process.

There has been so much noise indulged in or created by those who have been sitting on the fence watching the real workers and laborers in this country that it has really gotten on the nerves of the workers. Here is an idle theorist sitting on the fence telling the farmer how better to plow the furrow, how better to hoe the corn or reap the crop; and he talks from long practice in such a way as to create the impression that he could do these things himself and that he knows from experience how to do it. Tell him to get down off the fence and start to plow the furrow, and the first thing that would happen to him, probably, would be that the plow handle would hit him in the jaw. Farmers will understand that; I do not know whether all Senators will or not. Take him at his word when he is advising the man how to cut down a tree and he probably would throw the tree so that it would fall on him and destroy him. It is a good thing once in a while to call these critics off the fence and say, "Here, you say you can do this; now do it." You are through with him then. That is the end of him.

Mr. President, I have occupied quite as much time as I think I am justified in occupying, and more time than perhaps some think I was justified in occupying. But it was not my intention that there should be any possible ground upon which anyone might base the supposition that the Republican Party did not know the difference between protective-tariff legislation and tariff for revenue. If we are going to have to compare them after the convention at Baltimore is over, I hope I have made some suggestions that may be useful in a further consideration of the difference between these two systems.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I anticipated proceeding with the discussion of this bill to-day, but there are a number of Senators upon the other side who have asked me not to do so until the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] is present. He is detained at the present time and is out of the city. It is quite evident that with the number of Senators absent we can not get a vote upon the bill to-day. Therefore, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah suggests the absence of a quorum, and the Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I rise to a question of parliamentary privilege.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will withdraw the suggestion if——

Mr. LODGE. The Senator can not withdraw it.

Mr. SMOOT. Only for a statement, however.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Nothing can be entertained unless it relates to the question of a quorum.

Mr. HEYBURN. I rise to a parliamentary question, which, I imagine, may be done. It is that such a suggestion is not in order under the unanimous-consent agreement. If that were not the case, you could destroy any unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. SMOOT. I believe the Senator said in the beginning of his speech to-day that he could suggest the absence of a quorum, and that would develop the fact that there was not a quorum here to do business.

Mr. HEYBURN. I said that I would do so in an alternative.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator submitted his point of order, and the Chair will rule on it. The Chair understands the Senator from Idaho to make the point of order that under the unanimous-consent agreement there can be no question raised as to the presence of a quorum. The Chair is constrained to overrule that point. It is a fundamental proposition that a quorum is essential to the doing of business, and the rule is imperative that whenever that suggestion is made the roll shall be called. There is no exception to it and no variation from it.

Mr. HEYBURN. My suggestion was only in the interest of harmony.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Clark, Wyo.	Johnston, Ala.	Root
Bacon	Crawford	Jones	Sanders
Borah	Cullom	Kenyon	Simmons
Bradley	Cummins	Lippitt	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	Curtis	Lodge	Smith, Ga.
Briggs	Dillingham	McCumber	Smoot
Bristow	du Pont	Nelson	Sutherland
Brown	Fall	Oliver	Thornton
Bryan	Fletcher	Overman	Tillman
Burnham	Gallinger	Page	Townsend
Catron	Gronna	Paynter	Warren
Chamberlain	Guggenheim	Perkins	Wetmore
Clapp	Heyburn	Poindexter	Works

Mr. THORNTON. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. FOSTER] is necessarily absent on account of illness.

Mr. ASHURST. I was requested to announce that the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] is necessarily detained from the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I had hoped that the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON], who spoke on the pending bill the other day, would be present, but he is absent from the city; and under the unanimous-consent agreement I must proceed with what I have to say upon this particular schedule.

In beginning my discussion of the chemical schedule I want at the very outset to congratulate the Democratic Party upon the fact that it has finally come to appreciate the value of information furnished by the Tariff Board in connection with tariff legislation. That these Democratic tributes to the ability of the Tariff Board may not be lost or forgotten, I ask permission to quote the following words uttered by the author of the chemical bill, Mr. HARRISON of New York, in presenting it to the House of Representatives. He said:

The members of the Ways and Means Committee take this opportunity of expressing to the Tariff Board their appreciation of the very valuable assistance which this report has been to them in the preparation of their bill. When the Tariff Board made this report to us, no inquiry had been made by them as to the supposed difference, if any, in the cost of production here and abroad, so that the Tariff Board documents published with this report refer solely to subjects which are of importance to all revisers of the tariff, either Republicans or Democrats.

This claim that the present bill is based in part, at least, upon information furnished by the Tariff Board or one of its experts is alone sufficient justification for the position taken by those Members who opposed the crude attempt made to revise the chemical schedule last session and fully sustains the President in his veto of that makeshift measure. Do not understand me as saying that even the present bill is based upon any report of the Tariff Board, for it is not. The Tariff Board has not made any complete report on the chemical schedule either to the President or to Congress. That board furnished the Ways and Means Committee of the House with simply a glossary or dictionary of chemical terms for its use in connection with the preparation of this bill. The chemical bill which passed Congress last session was enough to convince anyone that its Democratic proponents were sadly in need of a dictionary to understand even the mere words of that measure. Undoubtedly, if they had had this pocket dictionary at hand last session, they never would have sent such a haphazard bill to the President for the veto that he so justly gave it.

This glossary as prepared by the Tariff Board, excellent as it is for dictionary purposes, does not contain, nor does it purport to contain, any adequate information upon which a revision of the chemical schedule should be based. That there may be no misunderstanding as to the scope of this "glossary" on Schedule A, as it is called, let me quote the definition which Webster's International Dictionary gives of the word "glossary." According to this authority a glossary is—

A collection of glosses, or explanation of words and passages of a work or author; a partial dictionary of a work, an author, a dialect, art, or science, explaining archaic, technical, or other uncommon words.

The chairman of the Tariff Board stated to the Finance Committee that this board had not had time as yet to begin any investigation whatever of the chemical schedule. When asked the direct question, if the Tariff Board had made any investigation of the chemical schedule, Mr. Emery said:

We prepared a glossary explaining what the different articles are and the ordinary statistics regarding them, but we have made no investigation into the industry.

This glossary taken by itself, Mr. Emery said, was not in any way adequate information upon which to base a revision of the chemical schedule and that it did not show the relative cost of making chemicals in this country and in foreign countries at all.

MAGNITUDE OF CHEMICAL INDUSTRY.

Such is the elementary information upon which the proponents of the chemical schedule have undertaken to play with the fate of an industry which alone numbers nearly 12,000 establishments, has an invested capital of more than $2,000,000,000, and employs nearly a quarter of a million wage earners. The industries affected both directly and indirectly by Schedule A include, according to the report of the American Institute of Chemical Engineers for 1905, 56,580 establishments, having 1,107,714 wage earners, whose annual compensation amounted to $575,635,257, and the value of their products $4,716,490,371. The Tariff Board has given its indorsement to the following statement by Dr. J. Lawrence Smith, American commissioner for the Universal Exposition in Paris, concerning the far-reaching scope of the chemical industry:

Industrial chemistry links itself with every modern art in such an intimate manner that were we to take away the influence and results of chemistry it would be almost like taking away the law of gravitation from the universe. Industrial chaos would result in one case as material chaos would in the latter.

The author of this bill has frankly stated that the Tariff Board, in submitting its glossary to the Ways and Means Committee, made no report upon the cost of production of chemicals at home and abroad, which information, from the Republican point of view at least, is absolutely fundamental to any scientific revision of the tariff to which our party is pledged.

The author of the bill was also fair enough to state that the Tariff Board was not responsible for the rates in the bill, that responsibility, he asserted, resting upon the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee. Typical of the Democratic method of preparing tariff measures is this gentleman's open avowal that the chemical schedule was chiefly drafted by himself and accepted by the Ways and Means Committee with practically no change. It is likewise a matter of fact that this bill was adopted by the Ways and Means Committee without ever having been read at a session of that committee and was accepted by the Democratic caucus without any reading whatever of its provisions to that body which now controls the legislative program of the House. Furthermore, a gag rule to force its passage through the House was adopted by the Democratic majority of that body without any reading of the bill to inform the Members of the House as to its provisions. This measure came to the Senate, therefore, without any information whatever to show the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad.

The glossary of the Tariff Board does not contain any such information nor has the board made any inquiry into that subject as yet. Moreover, neither the author of the bill nor the Ways and Means Committee of the House obtained any information as to the condition of the chemical industry or its costs of production at home and abroad. No hearings were held by the Ways and Means Committee on this schedule, its author admitting that he had no information upon which to base his revision except the testimony in accordance with which the act of 1909 had been prepared and the informal statements of a few gentlemen who came to Washington and asked the Democratic subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee for an opportunity to explain their views. Most of these statements undoubtedly were made by importers anxious to tear down the American protective-tariff system. As far as is known, whatever they may have said to the subcommittee in secret was not taken down nor have any of the statements made to that committee been printed. No opportunity was given the other members of the committee to question or cross-examine these importers nor were American manufacturers permitted to make any answer to the arguments that they may have poured into the ears of the author of the chemical schedule.

FINANCE COMMITTEE'S HEARINGS.

In marked contrast with this method of considering measures vitally affecting the prosperity of the American people is the careful consideration which the Committee on Finance has given the pending measure. So far as within its power and its time since the chemical bill was referred to the Finance Committee on February 22, 1912, hearings have been held on that schedule, and everyone desiring to appear before the committee or submit a statement has been accorded the fullest freedom to do so. The minority members of the committee were permitted to be present, summons witnesses of their own, and cross-examine every witness at great length. At the conclusion of these hearings the committee decided that Congress ought to wait until it receives a full and complete report from the Tariff Board before it undertakes to legislate further on this subject.

The bill in itself is a confession that its proponents do not possess adequate information to revise the chemical schedule at this time. If the advocates of this bill contend that it is a just and honest revision of the chemical schedule, then they must admit that the bill which they supported last session was an unjust and dishonest measure. If they insist that the chemical schedule which they passed last session was a fair revision, based upon adequate information, then they confess that the pending bill is unfair and is not based upon information sufficient to warrant jeopardizing the livelihood of more than a million wage earners who are directly or indirectly affected by Schedule A.

I want to be entirely fair in this matter, and I am glad to say that the author of the pending bill, who has assumed all responsibility for its rates, has stated that if the Ways and Means Committee had had an opportunity of originating the chemical schedule last session it would have been drafted upon somewhat different lines. This statement fully sustains the position taken by those Members of Congress who voted against that iniquitous measure and upheld the President in his veto of it.

The pending bill shows a most remarkable change of front by the Democratic Party in regard to the policy of free raw materials. This measure was heralded to the country as another downward revision, yet it contains the greatest transferring of articles from the free to the dutiable list that has been witnessed in tariff legislation for many years. The Democratic Party proposes in this bill to take more than 150 articles from the free list of the act of 1909 and place them on the dutiable list. The value of the articles thus imported free in 1911 under the Republican tariff amounted to $42,347,887, upon which the Democratic bill proposes to place a duty ranging from a quarter of a cent a pound, as in the case of coconut oil, to $3 a ton on nitrate of potash.

The free list of the Democratic bill includes only 16 items, the value of whose imports for 1911 amounted to $283,543. In other words, chemical products valued at more than $42,000,000 are revised upward, while products valued at but little more than a quarter of a million are revised downward. These figures do not bear out the Democratic estimate that their revision in Schedule A is a reduction of 31½ per cent. On the contrary, they fully sustain the estimate that the bill really makes an increase of 20 per cent over the present rates. This increase is due to the most remarkable and wholesale transfer of material from the free to the dutiable list. As regards the finished products covered by the bill, there undoubtedly has been a considerable reduction in rates.

FROM FREE TO DUTIABLE LIST.

The following articles now on the free list will become dutiable if this bill goes into effect:

Ambergris.
Acids: Benzoic acid, phosphoric acid, phthalic acid, picric or nitropicric acid.
Alizarin, natural or artificial, and dyes derived from alizarin or from anthracene. Amended.
Balsams: Copaiba, fir or Canada, Peru, tolu, storax or styrax, and all other crude.
Castor or castoreum.
Alkaloids or salts of cinchona bark.
NOTE.—While these alkaloids should be dutiable and protected as manufactures of the United States, yet the feeling among the people, especially in the South, is that an article of such world-wide use, and a specific for malaria, should be as cheap as possible; that is, providing we count the tariff as a tax.
Coal-tar products known as dead and creosote oil, soluble and sulfonated dead and creosote oil, anthracene and anthracene oil, benzol, naphtol, resorcin, toluol, xylol; all the foregoing not medicinal and not colors or dyes.
Coal-tar products known as anilin oil and salts, toluidin, xylidin, cumidin, binitroluol, binitrobenzol, benzidin, tolidin, dianisidin, naphtylamin, diphenylamin, benzaldehyde, benzyl chloride, nitrobenzol and nitrotoluol, naphtylaminsulfoacids and their sodium or potassium salts, naphtolsulfoacids and their sodium or potassium salts, amidonaphtolsulfoacids and their sodium or potassium salts, amidosalicylic acid, binitrochlorbenzol, diamidostilbendisulfoacid, metanilic acid, paranitranilin, dimethylanilin; all the foregoing not medicinal and not colors or dyes.
Tea siftings, etc.
NOTE.—These are used in the manufacture of caffeine and are not produced in this country. Although the rate of duty on caffeine has been advanced the rate charged on the tea siftings or sweepings would more than compensate for this extra duty.
Cocculus Indicus: An article of little importance. Not grown or made in this country.
Cudbear: Used as a coloring matter. Not produced in this country.
Cuttlefish bone: Large quantities of this are imported. None is produced in this country.
Divi-divi: A tannin-containing material which is used in tanning. It is the husks of a plant imported from South America. It is not produced in this country. It is quite an important article of commerce. A duty on this would increase the cost of tanned skins and leather.
Ergot.
Gums: Amber and amberoid, unmanufactured, or crude gum; arabic; copal; dragon's blood; gambier; kauri and damar; lac, crude, seed, button and stick and shell; resin, crude; scammony; Senegal; tragacanth; and all other gums and gum resins in a crude state.
None of these articles are produced in the United States, and placing a duty on them is a tax on raw materials, increasing the cost of mucilage, pastes, tanning, coloring, etc.
Indigo, crude: As is well known, indigo is a product of India. None is produced in this country. Placing a duty on it would increase the cost of dyeing, especially in the finer grades of woolens.
Iodine, crude.
Leaves, roots, and spices: Buchu; coca leaves; gentian; licorice root, unground; sarsaparilla root; cassia buds, cassia, and cassia vera; cinnamon, and chips of; cloves, unground; clove stems, unground; ginger root, not preserved or candied; mace, unground; nutmegs, unground; pepper, black or white, unground; pimento; saffron, safflower, and extract of, and saffron cake; salicin, a glucoside, obtained from the bark of several species of salix and populus. Used in medicine.
Sheep dip, not containing arsenic.
Strontia, oxide of, and protoxide of strontian, etc.
Terra alba, not made from gypsum.
Tonka beans.
Tumeric.
Turpentine, Venice.
Uranium, oxide and salts of.
Valonia.
Wax, mineral and vegetable.
Grease: Enfleurage; sulphur oil or olive foots; marrow, crude.
Oils: Vegetable, fixed or expressed: Almond, sweet; coconut, not refined or deodorized; mace; Chinese nut oil; peanut oil; olive oil, rendered unfit for use as food; palm; palm kernel; sesame; and soya bean, free. Volatile or essential and distilled: Bitter almond; anise, or aniseed; bergamot; camomile; caraway; cassia and cinnamon; cedrat; citronella or lemon grass; jasmine; juniper, lavender and aspic or spike lavender; lemon; limes; neroli or orange flowers; origanum, red or white; rosemary or anthos; roses, attar of; thyme; and valerian.
Turpentine, and spirits of.
Civet.
Lac dye and lac spirits.
Lacterene or casein.
Annatto, roucou, or orleans, and extracts of.
Arsenic, and sulphide of, or orpiment.
Wood ashes and lye.
Saltpeter, crude, a raw material, a duty on which would increase the cost of manufacture of other articles on which the duty has been reduced.
Nitrate of soda: Used as a fertilizer and in the manufacture of sulphuric acid and nitric acid. A product of Chile, the only place in the world where it is produced. A duty on this will increase the cost of fertilizers and nitrates.
Cyanimid, guano: Used as fertilizers—guano, the natural fertilizer; cyanimid, manufactured. No reason why such distinction should be made, as sulphate of ammonia, another manufactured fertilizer, is still on the free list.
Madder, or munjeet, or Indian madder.
Manna.
Mineral salts, obtained by evaporation from mineral waters.
Myrobolans.
Orchil or orchil liquid.
Pitch, Burgundy.

Under H. R. 20182 the following articles are transferred from the dutiable to the free list:

Acids: Acetic acid, chromic acid, sulphuric acid, and oil of vitriol.
Antitoxins, vaccine virus, and all other serums derived from animals and used for therapeutic purposes.
Blue vitriol or sulphate of copper.
Borax, crude and unmanufactured, and borate of lime, soda, and other borate material, crude and unmanufactured.
NOTE: This paragraph is incorrectly worded, as there is no such article as "crude borax."
Acetate of lime.
Charcoal, blood char, bone char, and bone black, used chiefly by the Sugar Refining Trust.
Copperas or sulphate of iron.
Refined mineral oils, paraffin oil, unmixed.
Paris green.
London purple.
Phosphorus.
Santonin and salts thereof.
Soda, sulphate of, crude, or salt cake, and niter cake.
Strychnia, and salts thereof.
Sulphur, refined or sublimed.

What justification there is, either as a business proposition or an economic theory, for increasing the cost of raw materials to American manufacturers and at the same time decreasing their protection against foreign competition I am utterly at a loss to explain. Yet it seems to have been the deliberate intent of the author of this bill to handicap American manufacturers as much as possible by transferring their raw materials from the free to the dutiable list and at the same time reducing the duties on the finished products of foreign manufacturers made from the same raw materials, on which the foreigner pays no duty. Only a few of the raw materials thus taken from the free list are produced in this country, so that the placing of a duty on them will not benefit any American producer of them as partial compensation for their increased cost to the American manufacturer. The bill is replete with instances of increased rates of duty upon raw materials and decreased rates on articles manufactured from these materials.

INCREASES ON RAW MATERIALS.

The table following gives only a few of the principal items of this character.

Raw material.	Tariff of 1909.	H. R. 20182.	Articles manufactured from—	Tariff of 1909.	H. R. 20182.
Acid, benzoic	Free	5 cents per pound	Benzoate of soda	25 per cent	15 per cent.
Acid, phthalic	do	do	Phenolphthalein	do	Do.
Argols or crude tartar	5 per cent	10 per cent	Tartaric acid	5 cents per pound	3 cents per pound.
			Cream tartar	do	2½ cents per pound.
All of coal-tar products save naphthalin, phenol, and cresol.	Free	5 per cent and 10 per cent.	Coal-tar products not colors or dyes	20 per cent	15 per cent.
			Coal-tar dyes or colors	30 per cent	25 per cent.
Camphor, crude	do	3 cents per pound	Collodion	40 per cent and 45 per cent	15 per cent.
			Articles of collodion	65 cents per pound and 30 per cent.	35 per cent.
Gum chicle	10 cents per pound.	20 cents per pound	Chewing gum	20 per cent	20 per cent.
Iodine, crude	Free	10 cents per pound	Potassium iodide	25 cents per pound	20 cents per pound.
			Iodoform	75 cents per pound	25 cents per pound.
Coca leaves	5 cents per pound	do	Cocaine	$1.50 per ounce	$2 per ounce.
Citrate of lime	Free	1 cent per pound	Citric acid	7 cents per pound	3 cents per pound.
Vanilla beans, crude	do	50 cents per pound	Vanilla extract	60 cents per pound and 25 per cent.	10 cents per pound and 20 per cent to 50 cents per pound and 40 per cent.

Another shifting of the Democratic position in regard to tariff revision is its conversion to the principal of levying specific instead of ad valorem duties upon imports. The chemical schedule, which the Democrats stood sponsor for last session, was based entirely on ad valorem duties. The pending bill is a complete abandonment of the old Democratic theory of ad valorem duties. There is not a duty in the present chemical bill which could be made specific that has not been made specific. Specific duties have been placed even upon articles which carry ad valorem duties under the present law. The Democratic Party is to be congratulated upon having, in this instance at least, progressed far enough to adopt the same method of levying tariff duties that practically every civilized country now has in force, and of which every Secretary of the Treasury, with one exception, regardless of his party affiliations, has declared to be the proper method of levying tariff duties.

I want to call the attention of the Senate for a moment to the map of the United States, included in the glossary of the Tariff Board, which shows the geographical distribution by States of the chemical establishments affected directly by Schedule A. This map is to be found opposite page 312 of the Tariff Board's glossary accompanying the House report on Schedule A (No. 326). The black spots show relatively the number of chemical industries located in each of the States. Notice particularly how large are the spots representing the chemical industry in the Northern and Eastern States, and how small are the spots representing the chemical industry in the Southern States. This map clearly indicates the tariff-revision policy of the Democratic House, controlled, as it is now, by Members from the Southern States. It is the same sectional spirit that prompted the House to revise the woolen and metal schedules before it gave any consideration whatever to the cotton schedule affecting its own part of the United States. Seventy-two per cent of all the chemical establishments in the United States are located in the 14 States constituting the middle and central divisions of the United States. Of the 6,194 chemical establishments in this country only 273 are located in the 15 Southern States.

LOCATION OF ESTABLISHMENTS AFFECTED.

The following table, prepared by the Tariff Board, shows the geographical distribution of establishments directly affected by Schedule A of the tariff act of 1909:

United States	6,194
Middle States	2,441
New York	1,292
New Jersey	288
Pennsylvania	704
Delaware	17
Maryland	128
District of Columbia	12
Central States	2,047
Ohio	470
Michigan	293
Indiana	188
Illinois	593
Wisconsin	130
Minnesota	132
Iowa	98
Missouri	233
New England States	750
Maine	58
New Hampshire	31
Vermont	28
Massachusetts	454

It is interesting to note that, while the House bill has placed a double burden upon the chemical industry of the Northern States by taxing their raw materials and decreasing the duties on competing products, it has taken good care of at least one item that is an important Southern product by transferring peanut oil from the free list of the present law to the dutiable list with a protective rate of 10 cents per gallon.

The Democratic Party has been loud of mouth in its attack on the trusts and equally as vociferous in proclaiming its love and affection for the "common" people of this country. Let us see what that party has done for the trusts and the people in the pending measure.

SUGAR TRUST AGAIN FAVORED.

First, let us take the Sugar Refining Trust which was so greatly elated over the Democratic sugar bill. That trust has found additional cause for rejoicing over the fact that the Democratic Party, with all the goodness of its heart, has eliminated the 20 per cent duty on bone black and placed that product on the free list. Bone black is used in large quantities by sugar refineries. Beet sugar does not have to go through these refineries and consequently this favor to the Sugar Trust will not be of any assistance whatever to the producers of beet sugar in the Northern and Western States. Bone black is one of the few items that the Democratic bill places upon its free list, so the Sugar Trust is under special obligations to the Democratic Party for reducing the cost of this material of which it makes so much use.

Again, let us take the Standard Oil Trust, about which such voluminous reports have been made by the Democratic investigating committees. This trust practically controls the output of crude gum resin, a residue of turpentine. This resin is used largely by soap manufacturers, especially in the more common grades of soap. Crude gum resin is on the free list of the Republican tariff law, but the Democratic bill proposes to transfer this Standard Oil product to the dutiable list. It is also to be noted in this connection that turpentine is produced largely in the South, and that more than $16,000,000 worth of resin was exported from the United States last year. By increasing the duty on this residue of turpentine the only beneficiary of the country will be the Standard Oil Trust and turpentine producers of the South, who will benefit thereby at the expense of the poor washerwomen or small retailer, from whom will be exacted a hard-earned tribute to the Oil Trust every time they have to buy a bar or box of laundry soap.

The Linseed Oil Trust, a $50,000,000 combination, also has good reason to thank the Democratic Party for the kind consideration it receives in the chemical bill. This trust practically controls the linseed-oil output of the United States. The Republican tariff act reduced the duty on linseed oil from 20 to 15 cents per gallon. The pending Democratic bill has made extensive reductions in many of the duties on oils. When it comes to the product of the Linseed Oil Trust, however, a reduction of only 2 cents a gallon is made, which, of course, is a matter of little consequence to that $50,000,000 organization.

But American trusts are not the only corporations nor are they the chief beneficiaries of the pending bill. The powerful trusts and combinations that control the chemical industry of Europe will reap the greatest benefit from this measure in the reduction of the duties on their products. Even the glossary of the Tariff Board makes clear the fact that the chemical industry of Europe, especially of Germany, is under the control of the trusts and combinations that would not be tolerated in this country. I shall refer to these foreign combinations again in a moment, but first I want to point out how this Democratic tariff bill affects the common people.

I wonder if the good housewives throughout the country are fully aware of the fact that the Democratic bill proposes to take all their spices, including cinnamon, cloves, ginger, mace, nutmegs, and black and white pepper, from the free list and impose duties on these articles so essential to the kitchen of from 1 to 8 cents a pound. Of white and black pepper alone there were imported into the United States 23,193,416 pounds, which under the Republican tariff act came in free of duty. The Democratic bill proposes to place a duty of 1 cent a pound on black and white pepper and estimates that the housewives of this country will have to contribute $171,230 as the price they will have to pay for a Democratic tariff revision. So much for black and white pepper, which is to be found on the table of every workingman in the country.

Now, let us see what this same Democratic tariff bill does with cayenne or red pepper. This pepper is confined largely to the tables of the rich and is also used especially throughout the South. These users of red pepper can thank the author of the Democratic bill for reducing its duty from 2½ cents to 1 cent a pound. In other words, the rich man will pay the same duty for his cayenne pepper as the poor man will pay for his black pepper.

Olive oil is another article to be found especially on the tables of the rich, yet the pending bill reduces the duty on olive oil in bottles and other containers from 50 to 30 cents per gallon, a revision downward that is of absolutely no benefit whatever to the ordinary individual.

Take the case of perfumed toilet soaps, which are a luxury of the rich. The House bill reduces the duty on perfumed soaps from 50 to 40 per cent, while at the same time increasing the duty on crude gum resin, one of the principal ingredients of laundry soap.

Is it in the interests of the common people of this country that such household articles as sarsaparilla, vanilla beans, licorice, and balsams have been removed from the free to the dutiable list?

BURDEN UPON WORKING PEOPLE.

The pending bill also transfers to the dutiable list certain dyes and indigo which are used largely in the coloring of calico, gingham, prints, and other cotton goods and low-priced fabrics such as denim, used for overalls. The manufacturers of cotton goods declared before the Finance Committee that the placing of a duty on these dyes will necessarily increase the cost of colored cotton goods to consumers in the United States. These fast colors have been imported free of entry since 1883. The Democratic tariff bill is therefore a revision backward of nearly 30 years in this item. The proposed duty of 10 per cent on indigo will increase the price of practically all the cotton garments worn by working people, who necessarily have to use garments of dark colors produced by indigo. A cotton dress or wrapper made of indigo blue and selling at $1.98 contains about 30 cents' worth of dye. The heavier goods require much more dye, at a cost running from 3 to 18 per cent of the entire cost of the article. This indicates the importance of the duty on indigo and other dyes to the users of the more common grades of cotton goods.

Aside from the foreign chemical trusts, the American importers, whose principal offices are in New York City, the home of the author of this bill, will be the chief beneficiaries of the proposed reduction in the tariff on foreign chemical products. I recently received such a frank confession from a New York importer as to their interest in reducing the protection now afforded American industries that I want to quote from his letter to show the small obligation that the American people owe the importers of foreign products:

Based on my own business experience—

Says this New York importer—

I believe that you can show by questioning those importers or those people who advocate a reduction of duties—

First. That the importer will derive on the sale of the imported articles an importer's profit of anywhere from 2½ to 10 per cent.

Secondly. That the only investment made by this importer is covered by a letter of credit furnished by him to the foreign manufacturer, which he in turn obtains from the foreign banker here for a commission of anywhere from one-fourth to 1 per cent, depending on whether the credit is for 30 days or 4 months; that by this process he is not obliged to invest any of his own money, but simply imports his goods against this letter of credit, which he furnishes to the manufacturer or seller on the other side, obtains his goods when they arrive here, disposes of same, collects his money, and retires the draft drawn against the letter of credit.

Thirdly. That the length of time upon which he bills his goods to the buyer here varies from 30, 80, or possibly 90 days, according to the percentage of profit derived by him on the transaction.

If he is dealing in a staple article and working on as close a margin as 2½ per cent, he will not extend to the buyer here more than 30 days' time.

If he is working on a 5 per cent margin, then he may extend 60 days, or possibly 90 days, and if working on a 10 per cent margin, he may be obliged to extend a longer credit; but, in any event, he is able to turn his money, if he has any money invested at all in the transaction, a sufficient number of times each year to return to him a profit of anywhere from 12 to 25 or possibly 30 or 40 per cent without, as above stated, the investment of a single dollar in machinery or the employment of labor in the manufacture of these goods, all of which is done on the other side, he simply taking the manufactured goods and disposing of same to the domestic buyer the same as the manufacturer is obliged to do after he has manufactured his goods.

There is great necessity of building up the chemical industry in the United States to relieve this country of dependency on Europe for such products, as is the case now to a large extent. The imports of chemical products, dyes, medicines, and so forth, for the fiscal year 1909, the last under the Dingley Act, were, in value, in round numbers $78,000,000, and for the calendar year of 1910, under the new law, $89,000,000, and for 1911, $97,000,000. In other words, there has been an increase in imports in two years under the existing law of $19,000,000.

This country now possesses all the natural resources required for the manufacture of organic and fine chemicals. There is an unlimited field for the future development of these branches of the industry. The importance of such development can hardly be exaggerated. It would not only create a new field of consumption for chemicals now produced, but also cheapen the cost to the domestic consumer of the finished product. There is an enormous production of chemicals in Europe in excess of the requirements of the home market. That surplus of products must be marketed, and by means of agreements embracing all the manufacturers this excess production is disposed of in foreign markets at prices which bear no relation to cost of production or to the prices ruling in the home market. A large percentage is dumped into the United States at prices so low that the American buyer is frequently required to agree not to reexport. The proposed reduction of duties on foreign chemicals would simply enlarge the opportunity for the German manufacturers to unload their surplus products in this country, thus replacing the products of American factories and American workmen.

FINE ORGANIC CHEMICAL INDUSTRY.

The manufacturers of fine organic chemicals in Europe employ over 200,000 men, of which 4,000 at least are engineers and chemists. There is no reason why this class of chemicals should not be produced in the United States, to the full extent of consumption at least, instead of relying on European organizations to furnish the requirements of our markets. It is in the fine organic chemical branches of the industry that the European producers make their large profits, and they are very jealous of competition in this market, and do not hesitate to pursue a course destructive to any manufacturer in this country who engages in that branch of the industry.

The report of the Ways and Means Committee on schedule A makes this admission, probably inadvertently, in regard to the superior development of the chemical industry in foreign countries. I read from the report:

There are some branches of the industry in which the United States does not appear to have reached the same stage of development that has been attained in some of the foreign countries, notably in Germany, which leads the world in highly advanced chemical manufacture.

I quote this paragraph from the article on the chemical industry in Germany accompanying the Tariff Board's glossary on schedule A:

Germany possesses to-day the best-developed chemical industry in the world, and accordingly she dominates the chemical trade of the globe. Some of its branches, and these the most profitable, are practically a German monopoly; her supremacy in this field as a whole is at present undisputed; industrially she is still expanding and there is no probability that she will relinquish any of her advantages without a strenuous struggle.

The chemical industry of Europe is practically maintained under what is known as the power of the convention, which is a method of combination. This convention, which is composed of eight corporations, does not hesitate to call meetings instantly to meet any new competition, and to allot each producer of the article a pro rata tonnage which he must place in competition with the new American competitor at a price much below cost.

Germany has giant factories, according to the Tariff Board, "of far-reaching concentration, either in the form of single corporate ownership or through the formation of combinations (cartels) dictating production and prices." A single chemical factory in Germany employs 10,000 persons, not counting the great number of distributing agencies all over the world. German law does not penalize such methods, but the Government assists, so that the industry is under what we would call in this country trust control. A number of these German organizations are bound by agreements of some kind to international "cartels," the object of which is to control the international market. The same condition exists in England, where the tendency is to eliminate competition the same as in Germany, and for identical reasons. One corporation in England has 7,000 employees, and controls a number of other corporations, while another is a consolidation of some forty-odd individual establishments, and they work in harmony, while other combinations with international scope are known to exist. In France certain branches of the French chemical manufactures are fairly consolidated in their management and ownership. One organization operates 17 establishments in France alone. These foreign combines now make a business of dumping in the United States. Whenever they have a surplus of any product they send it to this country for disposal, and if any new competitor starts here they make a business of selling below cost to force him out of business. Several instances of this character, with the temporary reduction in prices to force out of business the American competition, were brought to the attention of the Finance Committee. But when competition here is ended the foreign combinations, which are in many cases international in scope, put up prices.

The United Kingdom at one time led the German Empire in the production of chemicals and allied products, but Germany has rapidly forged to the front. The United Kingdom's ready accessibility to raw materials, the latter depending largely upon her extensive shipping facilities, helped her to increase her chemical manufactures while her great mineral wealth added materially in that respect. The manufacture of soda ash by the Le Blanc process was the life and center of the chemical industry for more than half of a century, enjoyed much in this respect in England because no other country had the necessary raw materials—salt or brine, limestone and coal—to be found in such close proximity, while brimstone and pyrites required for making sulphuric acid, which England, like most other countries, must import, were brought back as ballast, and consequently at a very low cost, in vessels that had carried England's merchandise to other lands. Under such conditions the chemical industry of Great Britain developed rapidly, but she has had to give the first place to her German competitors. In 1879 Germany imported 24,000 tons of soda, representing the consumption for that year; in 1910 that country imported only 154 tons, while her exports had gone up from practically nothing to 62,520 tons. Numerous similar instances illustrating the growth of the German chemical industry could be given. According to the Tariff Board's glossary the German chemical industry is the most profitable of all industries in that country, the average dividends per share being 14.03 per cent. The manufacture of dyeing material shows an average dividend of 20.49 per cent. Since 1890 the average rate of dividends paid by establishments in Germany manufacturing dyestuffs, and so forth, was never less than 20 per cent.

One reason for Germany's prosperity is due to the fact that Germany has done all in her power to instill into her own people the love for German goods, while it appears that in the United States there is a large party actuated by a desire to instill a love for the goods of every country other than our own. The Germans have what is called the 10 business commandments posted up in nearly every business house, calling on Germans not to buy a foreign article when the home article would serve the same purpose because it makes the country poorer, and to write on German paper with German pens and German ink, and to use German blotters, and use German clothes to dress with, and so forth; advice that has proven efficacious in that country.

American manufacturers produce only a small part of the chemicals now consumed in this country, and to deprive them of protection for their labor, as proposed by the Underwood bill, means simply to extinguish the American industry and subject our people to the exactions of the European chemical trusts. Canada, with its wealth of raw materials and the valuable water power to be found within her extensive borders, possesses all the elements necessary for the development of a large chemical industry. With a protective tariff of her own and the United States market open freely to it, Canada may be expected to rapidly increase its production and sell its surplus product in our markets.

AMERICAN INDUSTRY IN DANGER.

Germany exported $189,517,498 worth of chemical and allied products in 1910, as compared with $84,588,644 for the United States, but half of our exports were cottonseed oil, fats, and other things not properly classified as chemicals. The American market is the most valuable in the world, and the foreign inventor and his foreign assignee naturally take all the advantage that the law here gives them to exploit this market as profitably as they can. For this reason the development of the chemical industry in this country has not been rapid, but with the imposition of duties on its raw materials and the reduction of the duties on its finished products its development will cease.

Foreigners can take out patents in this country without producing the article here, a privilege not extended to any extent by other countries to inventors in the United States. This accounts for the fact that 62 per cent of our patents in this industry taken out between 1900 and 1910 were obtained by foreigners living in foreign countries, Germany taking out by far the largest number. The author of this bill has stated that the chemical industry was more able than any other to stand upon its feet and not fear invasion from the foreign manufacturers, because many chemicals are the subject of either patents or secret processes. As a matter of fact, with the exception of coal-tar colors and a few coal-tar derivatives, there is hardly a single article mentioned in proposed law which is covered by exclusive patents or secret processes. Even synthetic indigo is now produced in Switzerland. Nearly all processes for the manufacture of these products are known and can be found in the chemical literature.

The American manufacturers are not only in competition with each other, but they are also in competition with these great foreign syndicates and combinations. Under the laws of this country, such combinations would be declared illegal and dissolved. These foreign combinations effectually control the market, regulate prices, and are able to dump surplus product into this country at prices with which our domestic manufacturers can not compete.

The glossary of the Tariff Board referred to by the Ways and Means Committee furnishes statistics which throw some light on the difference between the wages in this country and in Germany. From this authority it appears that for 1910 there were employed in this country in the chemical industry 311,537 persons who received in pay $197,251,000, or an average of $633.15 per annum. The statistics given for Germany show the average paid in 192 establishments to range from $291.55 to $318.44 per annum. In other words, the average paid in this country is more than double that in the same industry in Germany.

In Germany chemists are numerous and can be obtained at a lower wage than the American manufacturer has to pay to his skilled laborers, while the services of a chemist in this country cost four times as much as in Germany. Greater care is taken in Germany in educating both chemists and workers in this industry. That country spends every year millions of dollars for the chemical departments of its universities, where many highly educated professors and their assistants are constantly working hand in hand with the large chemical factories for the development of new processes and the invention of new products. If the salaries were taken out of that total amount, the average German wages would be considerably below the amount stated. The difference between the cost of American and foreign labor is greater when France or Belgium are taken into consideration. Then, in addition to this enormous advantage of lower wages and more efficient labor, because of its better training, there is harmonious union of action without individual competition between the different branches of the industry in Germany and other countries.

It appears from an analysis made of this bill that the revenue on finished products will be reduced from $11,104,090, as shown under the existing law for 1911, to $9,996,097, which is the amount estimated under the proposed bill. This analysis also shows that the duties on raw materials will be increased from $1,812,360 to $6,064,060. This means a double hardship to the manufacturer by removing his protection against the more favorable conditions of manufacture existing in foreign countries, and then taxing his basic materials so as to impose greater hardships on him in this country. The result of such a policy must inevitably be the abandonment by the chemical manufacturers of many branches of the industry, thus throwing many men out of work, and in the final result increasing the prices to consumers.

MEDICINAL AND OTHER PURE CHEMICALS.

The manufacture of medicinal and other pure chemicals requires the highest degree of scientific knowledge and the employment of expert chemists and skilled workmen. Medicinal chemicals are mostly made in small quantities, many of them in lots of only a few pounds or ounces. The preparations have to be conducted either by the hand or under the immediate supervision of expert and experienced chemists. There must be careful supervision to prevent mistakes, as the wrong labeling of a package might be followed by fatal results. The manufacture of pure chemicals should therefore be entitled to a higher protection and not be considered in the same class with technical chemicals, produced in great quantities with the employment of machinery and in the production of which skilled labor plays a less important part and comparatively few high-grade chemists are required. Purity is of the first importance in medicinal chemicals, and the products of the American manufacturers have a higher standing than those of foreign manufacturers. The business is one of a great deal of responsibility, and the principal cost is labor. Machinery can be employed only to a small degree. The higher cost not only of labor but of most materials and things that enter into the making up of the manufacturing plant more than offset the 25 per cent protection now afforded. A comparison of the rates of duty imposed on the products of the textile, iron, glass, and many other industries will show that the rate of 25 per cent ad valorem on chemicals is comparatively small. That rate is not a sufficient protection now, as is shown by the fact that the importation of medicinal, photographic, and other fine chemicals has been steadily increasing for a number of years. If the duty is reduced to 15 per cent, as proposed by this bill, manufacturers assert that they will have to discontinue the production of a large number of articles and become importers.

There are no exports of medicinal chemicals from the United States, because it does not pay to manufacture here at the present time in competition with Germany, owing to the greater cost of labor and of chemists, while a large part of the apparatus used in chemical manufacture has to be imported. German manufacturers, under their trust agreements, sell their surplus, when necessary, abroad at the cost of manufacture and even less. The result of this is most disastrous to the American producer and of no benefit to the consumer. The "dumping" process is well recognized as a disadvantage to trade, and the foreign makers for that reason dump in this country instead of temporarily reducing prices at home. If importations were stimulated by reducing the duty, it would necessitate the abandonment of five-eighths of the present domestic product to bring the revenue up to the current figures, and thus would destroy the industry in this country and leave us at the mercy of the foreign combines.

Mr. Adolph G. Rosengarten, of Philadelphia, one of the largest manufacturers of chemicals in the country, protested vigorously to the Finance Committee against the passage of this bill, which he stated would end the American manufacture of a number of articles, throw out of employment many persons engaged in various branches of the chemical industry, and in a short time give to the foreign producers the control of the American market in many items. Making benzoic acid, now on the free list, dutiable at 5 cents per pound and reducing the duty on sodium benzoate, made from that acid, from 25 to 15 per cent, would, as Mr. Rosengarten says, stop the production of the latter article in this country.

Citric acid is now dutiable at 7 cents per pound, which it is proposed to reduce to 3 cents, while the raw materials, lime juice, now free, is made dutiable at 10 per cent, and citrate of lime at 1 cent per pound. These two articles are not produced in this country. The duty imposed on the raw material is equivalent to 1¾ cents per pound on the citric acid contained in citrate of lime, and 2 cents per pound on that in the lime juice, which gives only a net protection between 1 and 1¼ cents per pound on citric acid. This leaves the actual ad valorem rate not more than between 3 and 4 per cent instead of 10.4 per cent as stated in the House report. It would be impossible to manufacture this product at this rate of duty in competition with the cheaper labor and free raw materials abroad. There is no country in the world in which an import duty is imposed on lime juice and citrate of lime as proposed by this House bill.

ALKALIES AND ALKALOIDS.

Alkalies, alkaloids, and all chemical and medicinal compounds, mixtures, and salts, and combinations thereof not specially provided for in the bill, are made dutiable at 15 per cent instead of 25 per cent, the existing rate, which is low enough as shown by the value of the imports last year, which amounted to $3,338,419. The estimated value of the imports under this proposed change of duties is placed at $5,040,000. This additional $1,700,000 of foreign products to be imported simply means the sacrifice of so much capital and labor in this country which must be turned into other channels, as the consumption of these articles will not be increased except as the population increases.

A duty of 10 per cent is imposed on quicksilver by the House bill as compared with 7 cents, the specific duty under the existing law. The duty on calomel, corrosive sublimate, and other mercurial medicinal preparations is reduced from 35 per cent to 15 per cent, with a reduction of only 1½ cents a pound on the raw material. This is another industry that would have to be abandoned under the proposed law.

Iodine is now free, but it is proposed by this bill to make it dutiable at 10 cents a pound. It is the raw material for a number of products on which the duties are greatly reduced by the proposed bill. Carbonate of potash is another raw material made dutiable.

Magnesia, calcined, medicinal, is made dutiable at one-half the rate of the existing law. In 1911 some 65,739 pounds were imported, which is said to be greater than the quantity manufactured in this country. Reducing the duty one-half simply means to extinguish the industry here and nearly double the imports.

Epsom salts, made principally from calcined magnesite, is an illustration of lowering the duty one-half on a finished product and imposing a duty on the crude material, none of which is produced in this country.

Strychnine and all salts thereof are made free under the proposed bill, while at the present time they are dutiable at 15 cents an ounce. This alkaloid is manufactured from the nux vomica bean, requiring great skill in its production, and being a violent poison must be made with great care. Why it should be singled out and placed upon the free list is incomprehensible, as it can not be produced in this country in competition with foreign makers if the duty be removed.

Mr. John F. Queeny, a St. Louis manufacturer, testified that the Monsanto Chemical Works is manufacturing six medicinal products, all of which a few years ago were imported from Germany, and that each one of these products is now sold in this country at very materially lower figures than at the time the corporation began business. Under this bill the American producers of those products would have to stop business. One of their productions is phenolphthalein, used in this country quite largely and manufactured up to about three years ago almost exclusively by the Germans. The duty on that product is reduced by the Underwood bill from 25 per cent to 15 per cent, while the raw material, phthalic acid, is taken from the free list and made dutiable at 5 cents per pound, equal to about 20 per cent of its value, or a higher duty than that placed on the finished product.

NO LIGHT ON EXISTING CONDITIONS.

The Manufacturing Chemists' Association of the United States has called attention to the careless way in which this bill has been prepared and states that the question of revising the chemical schedule is a problem that can not adequately be solved except by the assistance of competent experts after prolonged and careful study. The chemical schedule deals with hundreds of different raw materials imported from every country in the world, and the number of combinations of finished products from these various basic elements is practically unlimited. No expert study of the chemical schedule has been completed by any official body. The Tariff Board has made no report upon the subject. That board had prepared "A glossary on Schedule A," which the Manufacturing Chemists' Association states is "a mere glossary or translation of technical chemical terms into laymen's English." That organization goes on to say that "the Ways and Means Committee was assisted by a trained chemist in the employ of the Tariff Board, but the assistance was merely in the nature of technical interpretation and could shed no light on the existing conditions of the American industry, the Tariff Board having conducted no investigation in this regard."

Not only are the rates of duty generally changed in the pending bill and many articles transferred from the free list to the dutiable list and others transferred from the dutiable list to the free list, but the phraseology and classification of the act have undergone many and varied alterations. The result is that if this bill should become a law the entire chemical industry will necessarily undergo a complete readjustment, with a result that would be in many cases disastrous.

Acetic acid, which is made by decomposing acetate of lime with a mineral acid, either sulphuric or hydrochloric, is put on the free list, though it is dutiable under the existing law at a specific rate, according to its specific gravity, the equivalent ad valorem in 1911 being 16 per cent. Europe produces acetic acid in enormous quantities. It frequently becomes of great importance to these foreign manufacturers to dispose of large tonnage of surplus product in this country. There has been a very active contest in progress between American factories, which has reduced the price so low that imports are comparatively small at present. Canada as a competitor will be particularly dangerous, because a manufacturer there will have the home market under the protective tariff of that country and can sell his product in this country with just as much advantage as to transportation rates as the American producer, and will have whatever advantage of lower labor cost and other things that may be derived by producing in that country.

Sulphuric acid can not be transported across the ocean, and therefore a large industry has been built up in the production of that product. But acetic acid, which is manufactured from acetate of lime and requires about 54 per cent of its weight of sulphuric acid to decompose it, can be brought here from Europe. The census of 1910 shows that 56,924,000 pounds of acetic acid were produced in the United States. The House bill now proposes to put it on the free list. One hundred pounds of this acid represents more than 93 pounds of strong sulphuric acid, which is a by-product in Europe. Acetic acid can be shipped at its maximum strength and diluted as required, and therefore 100 pounds of this product, when imported, would shut off the consumption of 87 pounds of sulphuric acid. Putting acetic acid on the free list would not only destroy that industry in this country, but also seriously interfere with the production of sulphuric acid.

The quantity of sulphuric-acid gas discharged daily into the atmosphere in Kansas, Oklahoma, Colorado, Utah, Montana, and California is so enormous that if the geographical location permitted they could supply the entire world with acid made from that gas and then have enough gas discharged in the atmosphere to make an equivalent of acid sufficient to supply the world many times over. But the geographical location and distribution of these sulphur-bearing ores makes exportation of the acid impossible. With all our waste of sulphur in sulphide ores and all the resulting destruction to vegetation, the manufacturer of sulphuric acid still buys one-half of his sulphur-bearing ores from Europe.

HYDROCHLORIC AND MURIATIC ACID.

Hydrochloric acid, or muriatic acid, furnishes another illustration of the manner in which this bill has been prepared. This acid is made from salt and sulphuric acid, the salt requiring about 90 per cent sulphuric acid to decompose it. Two products result—one, muriatic acid, which protects itself because of the difficulty in its transportation over the ocean, and the other, sulphate of soda, a dry salt. It is used in enormous quantities for window-glass making, for Glauber's salt, and in the manufacture of other chemicals. Sulphate of soda, which has heretofore had a nominal protection of $1 per ton, has arbitrarily been put on the free list, thereby enabling the foreigners to dump their by-products at the expense of our own. Glauber's salt, which contains 50 per cent of sodium sulphate, is left dutiable at $1 per ton.

Bleaching powder, another chlorine product consumed in a very large way, is also made from common salt. The duty is reduced from one-fifth to one-tenth of a cent per pound. It is largely manufactured at Niagara Falls, where some advantages exist in power cost, but the large consumption on the seaboard involves transportation expenses in excess of ocean freights. That accounts for the fact that with all the raw material in this country and every reason to supply the market exclusively with American goods more than 99,000,000 pounds were imported last year.

Magnesia salts are made from magnesite, an imported article. The House bill, therefore, imposes a duty of $1 per ton on the calcined product, the raw material, and at the same time reduces the duty one-half on the finished salts, thus not only handicapping the manufacturer of chemicals, but also the maker of fire bricks, insulating material, and asbestos products.

Chromium salts furnish another example of the disregard of existing conditions. Chromates and bichromates are both reduced to 1 cent a pound, although the existing law reduced the duty on the former from 2 cents per pound to 1¼ cents, and on bichromate of potash from 3 cents per pound to 2¼ cents. This industry has to compete with the foreign manufacturers of Scotland and Germany, who work under an agreement, and sell bichromate of soda in this country at less than the foreign prices, and bichromate of potash at about the same figures, duty paid.

Nitric acid is another product of sulphuric acid, and enters into a large number of other chemicals. Cheap nitric acid and cheap sulphuric acid depend to a large extent on the magnitude of the business done, and if sweeping reductions are made in the chemical salts that consume these acids, then the cost of producing them is enhanced and the chemical salts themselves become more costly to manufacture.

One hundred pounds of aniline oil consumes 84 pounds of sulphuric acid and 81 pounds of nitric acid. Aniline oil is the base of a very large number of other chemicals, the manufacture of which consumes acetic acid, chlorine, bichromate of potash, and a large number of diversified chemical products. In Germany half a dozen companies make them all, and for all practical purposes their agreements reduce these to one great corporation acting as a world-wide trust and monopoly to destroy competition. Many of the reductions proposed in this bill come at the very time when greater protection is needed. Sulphate of ammonia is one of these products; only 16 per cent of the total that might be made is recovered. Approximately 25 per cent ammonia requires 75 per cent sulphuric acid. In 1905 only 30,000,000 pounds were imported, but in 1910, 207,000,000 were imported.

SALICYLIC ACID.

Salicylic acid was dutiable at 10 cents a pound under the Dingley tariff and was reduced to 5 cents a pound by the existing law, and the pending bill proposes a further reduction to 2½ cents a pound. All of the European salicylic acid factories are combined. Seeing in the American manufacturers their only opponents they have been for years making special prices on the American market, much lower than they sell for in their own countries. They want to put the American manufacturers out of business and thereby regain control of the world's market which they enjoyed about 20 years ago, before the first salicylic acid factory was started in this country. The consumers in this country would not benefit by a reduction of the duty to 2½ cents a pound, for after the domestic manufacturers were thereby eliminated the foreign syndicates undoubtedly would advance the price of the product of which they would then enjoy a monopoly. There will be no increase of revenue under this slaughter of rates, because even if the European syndicates get absolute control of this market the revenue on all salicylic acid that can be sold in this country would not amount to more than $10,000.

It is proposed to reduce the duty on tartaric acid to 3 cents a pound as against the existing rate of 5 cents, and on cream of tartar to 2½ cents as against the existing rate of 5 cents, and to increase the duty on argols, the crude material from which those products are chiefly made in this country, from 5 per cent to 10 per cent; that is to say, 100 per cent increase, which will at times make the duty on the crude material exceed the duties on the manufactured products. Foreign manufacturers situated in the argol-producing countries of southern Europe already possess advantages of various kinds over the American manufacturers, the chief of which is their ability to use a lower testing grade of crude material, which will not bear transportation here, and lower labor cost.

The manufacturers on the Pacific coast that use argols protested that the increase of the duty on argols and the reduction of the duty one-half on the finished products would simply make it impossible to find a market for such argols as are produced in this country. If the duty on argols is 10 per cent, the duty on the crude material will be 2½ cents a pound higher than that proposed on the refined goods, such as cream of tartar, tartaric acid, and Rochelle salts.

Blanc fixe is manufactured in this country from weatherite spar chiefly, which is mined in England. There are two small mines in Germany, but none of the weatherite is exported from that country, and there is none available either in the United States or in Canada. The importers pay the same freight rate on the raw materials that the exporters from England and Germany pay on the finished product. The other two articles which enter largely into the manufacture of blanc fixe are sulphuric and muriatic acid. In England muriatic acid is sold at 50 cents a hundred pounds less than the price in the United States, and in Germany sulphuric acid is one-half the price charged in this country. Blanc fixe from England could be sold, duty paid, under the proposed law at $1.61 per hundred pounds less than American cost of production, according to testimony before the Finance Committee. The present duty is one-half cent per pound, and the reduction to one-fourth of a cent, as proposed in the House bill, would simply throw the business into the hands of the English and German manufacturers.

DEXTRINES AND SUBSTITUTES.

The proposed change in the duties on dextrines, burnt starch, or British gums, dextrine substitutes, etc., is another illustration of the unscientific manner in which this bill has been prepared. Dextrines are made from cornstarch, potato starch, tapioca, and sago. Those made in this country are principally from cornstarch and potato starch, both of which are classified under the existing law in the schedule relating to agricultural products. In the proposed law dextrines are subjected to a duty of only three-fourths of a cent per pound, while the duty on potato starch remains at 1½ cents, the practical result of which would be that instead of a duty discriminating in favor of the American manufacturer there will be one discriminating against him and in favor of the foreign manufacture of dextrines. Excluding labor and overhead cost, under this proposed bill 100 pounds of dextrines manufactured in Germany could be sold in the United States for $4, while 100 pounds manufactured here from imported potato starch, without labor and overhead charges, would cost $5.30, making a difference of $1.30 per hundred pounds in favor of the foreign producer, which would be still larger if the labor cost and the overhead charges were taken into consideration.

A very good illustration of the difficulty in building up an industry in the United States without sufficient protection is furnished in the manufacture of lactic acid, which is also made from dextrines, cornstarch, or potato starch, or the waste from sugar mills, and which is manufactured in a small way in the United States. It was stated in the House report on this bill that lactic acid is specifically an American industry; that the consumption is large and increasing; that four times as much lactic acid is exported as is imported; and that in the foreign market the American product meets successfully the competition of other makers. On the contrary, lactic acid, although first produced in America, is now a German industry, and in the dyeing, printing, and textile industries, the German imports of lactic acid monopolize almost the entire American market—at least 90 per cent thereof. This industry, instead of flourishing in the United States, has shown an actual drop in output. There are only three plants in the United States, and these have been running at less than one-third of their capacity. The production in the United States dropped from more than 1,600 tons American consumption in 1908 to under 1,200 tons in 1910. Of the three producers in the United States, two have never exported a ton of lactic acid to any European market, while the exports of the third producer, located in Massachusetts, have never been sent to any producing country, and, according to the best information obtainable, are far below the tonnage imported. The Massachusetts producer established himself in England, where the acid is not produced, in a small way, so that the English trade became familiar with his product before the Germans produced any, and the English still adhere to the use of the American acid.

The Germans have a good market at home, and the advantage of cheap labor, lower pay to chemists, lower cost of raw material, potato starch in abundance, and a volume of business which has enabled them to go further in the cheapening of the product than Americans have been able to do. In 1897 the manufacture of lactic acid was in its infancy, and the standard strength of the acid in this country was 22 per cent acid, including lactic anhydride. In that year Congress recognized the new industry and placed a duty of 3 cents a pound on lactic acid without specifying the strength. The Germans developed a process of concentration by which they raised the acid content of their imports to a strength of 40 per cent without having to pay any more duty. This concentrated German acid, after its receipt in America, was then, and still is, diluted to the standard strength of 22 per cent before being put on sale. Thus a large proportion of the German tonnage really paid no duty whatever. In 1909 Congress imposed an extra duty of 1 cent a pound on all concentrated above 40 per cent. The Germans then developed their process to the point of 80 per cent concentration, and their imports are to-day of that character. The result has been that the light, refined American lactic acid has been almost entirely driven out of the dyeing trades and the German output has increased. The German acid has nearly the control of that part of the market, and instead of any reduction of the duty there should be a rearrangement so as to impose a duty according to the strength of the acid, and the light or refined and more costly acid should receive a higher protection than the dark acid. But, if the proposed bill becomes a law, the lactic-acid industry will cease to exist in the United States.

THE PYROXYLIN INDUSTRY.

The pyroxylin (soluble guncotton) industry is distinctly and peculiarly American. It was discovered by an American and developed in this country after a large expenditure in the way of experiments. New machinery had to be designed and made, the science of chemistry had to be taxed to produce new and unknown working materials, all resulting in giving to the world a unique commodity and bringing into existence manufacturing communities in the United States that have made this their life study and work, aggregating to-day some 40,000 operatives, or about 200,000 persons dependent upon this industry. Foreign manufacturers copied the American plants and have a decided advantage in the cheapness by which crude materials can be obtained by them, lower cost of labor and overhead expenses, besides many skilled chemists. Competing factories have sprung into existence in Germany, France, England, Russia, Austria, Italy, and also now in Japan, where two very large factories have recently been completed. As conditions stand to-day the foreign manufacturers control all the markets of the world except the United States. This is the result of their cheap labor and other advantages.

There are from six to eight million dollars' worth of foreign articles made from compounds of pyroxylin imported into the United States. The wording of the present law in imposing duties on such articles is not sufficiently defined so as to make certain all of the imports of this product. Many articles made partly or wholly of compounds of pyroxylin are imported into this country under different schedules, causing considerable confusion and loss to the Government.

American manufacturers greatly fear the products of the two large factories that have been recently constructed in Japan. They have a capacity of 4 to 5 tons of material per day. The average daily wage of factory hands in Japan is 12 cents, the lowest being 4.9 cents and the highest 37.4 cents. The Japanese possess unique decorative skill, and their Government controls 90 per cent of the camphor production of the world, camphor being the chief raw material used in the production of celluloid and other combinations of pyroxylin. The selling agent for the Japanese Government for camphor is the same Japanese firm that has erected a large factory for the production of combinations of pyroxylin and which will be perhaps the most dangerous competitor of American manufacturers. The many articles produced from pyroxylin combinations are classified in the tariff as luxuries. The technical nature of the product will not permit the use of automatic machinery such as is used in other industries, but compels manufacturers to rely in a great measure on handwork. In addition to camphor, the manufacturers in this country use approximately 10,000,000 pounds of cotton a year.

It is evident from these facts and the large importations that the existing duty is not too great, and it is doubtful if it will be sufficient to allow American manufacturers to exist in competition with Japan. But the Democrats propose to reduce the duty on manufactured articles from 65 cents a pound and 30 per cent ad valorem to 35 per cent. This reduction is so drastic and so radical that if it becomes a law it may seriously cripple the industry if not wipe it out altogether.

In this connection I wish to refer to a statement which was made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] upon this item. He says:

> At a hearing before the Ways and Means Committee in 1890, page 384, J. R. France, president of the Arlington Manufacturing Co., one of the companies appearing before the Finance Committee in 1911, in speaking of a bill permitting the use of denatured alcohol in the manufacture of celluloid, said as follows: "The increasing cost of manufacture makes this tax entirely prohibitive to the sale of our goods in all markets except home. There are large fields open to us from which, for this cost, we are entirely shut out. The superiority of American manufacturers in this line is so much in advance of foreign competition that despite the disparity of earnings by employees as compared with foreign labor we could easily compete, and that with good profits, except for this tax." The tax referred to, of course, is the internal-revenue tax upon alcohol then in existence. In view of this statement by Mr. France, the complaint of his successors before the Finance Committee at this session that they will be subjected to ruinous competition by reason of the reductions in the duties upon celluloid is without any substantial foundation.

Mr. President, twenty-two years ago America was about the only country manufacturing celluloid. We led the world at that time in its manufacture. It was essentially an American product. But since that time Austria, Germany, France, England, and Japan have all established the industry, and are making it with the same formula, into the same articles, and by practically the same class of machinery.

I must disagree with the Senator from Maine when he says that the goods made in Japan are of the coarser grade. We have all seen in the stores of this country celluloid articles of the finest quality and beautiful design. There are no people in all the world who imitate so well as do the Japanese.

While 22 years ago the statement of Mr. J. R. France may have been correct, it does not apply to-day.

The existing duty on refined camphor is 6 cents per pound, while the crude material is on the free list. The House bill assesses a duty of 3 cents a pound on crude camphor and reduces the duty on refined to 5 cents a pound, which, taking into consideration the loss in refining, would leave a protection to the American refiner of only 1 and three-quarters of a cent per pound. As one-third of the total consumption of refined camphor in this country is now imported, this change in duty would extinguish the American industry of refining camphor. The capacity of the American refiners is now more than enough to supply the whole United States, but they can not compete altogether with the Japanese refiners. Crude camphor is controlled entirely by the Japanese Government, and can only be purchased from its agents. The importation of refined camphor has increased from 87 pounds in 1890 to 214,049 in 1905, and reached 558,014 pounds in 1909, and has been a little less since that time. This shows the inroads the Japanese are making in the way of exporting refined camphor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CATRON in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know to what extent we are making progress in the production of crude camphor in this country, but the Government is making efforts to see if it can be produced here, and I know of one plantation in Florida of some 5,000 acres of camphor trees. So far as I am advised the industry is of considerable consequence.

Mr. SMOOT. The camphor produced outside of what is controlled by the Japanese Government is a mere bagatelle, and has no influence on the world's prices. Not to exceed 5 per cent of the camphor used in America is what is known as synthetic camphor.

At one time the Japanese put the price so high that camphor was $1.24 per pound, and then the Germans produced a synthetic camphor made from turpentine, which caused the Japanese to reduce their prices to a point that prevented the importation of this synthetic article. That is the condition to-day, and this proposed imposition of a duty on the raw material and a reduction of the present low duty on the refined material will extinguish the industry in the United States, without a solitary advantage to consumers, for the reason that the Japanese fix the price simply to exclude synthetic camphor.

ALUMINA, ALUM, ETC.

Under the Dingley law the duty on hydrate of alumina was six-tenths of 1 cent per pound. The importation in 1898 amounted to $2,092,082 pounds, and this gradually decreased until only 20,310 pounds were imported in 1909. Under the existing law the rates of duty are decreased to four-tenths of 1 cent per pound when the hydrate does not contain more than 64 per cent of alumina and to six-tenths of a cent per pound above that percentage. As a result imports increased rapidly, amounting to 1,538,619 pounds in 1910 and 2,006,561 pounds in 1911. The total estimated sales of hydrate of alumina of strengths under 64 per cent will not exceed at the maximum 3,000,000 pounds per annum. Thus under the existing law the imports are 50 per cent of the domestic consumption. The duty on strengths above 64 per cent is less than 5 per cent ad valorem, but there is no demand of any consequence for this high-grade product. Hydrate of alumina is produced from bauxite. It is essentially refined bauxite. In Europe, France and Germany are the great producing countries. When the industry is depressed there it leaves a surplus product, which could be sold in this country under any further reduction in the tariff at prices with which no American manufacturer could compete. With one-half of the amount consumed now imported, and the imports increasing each year, there appears to be no excuse for any further reduction in the duty.

The same rate of duty, 15 per cent, is provided by the House bill for alum cake, sulphate of alumina, and so forth. Under the law of 1897, with a specific duty of one-half of 1 cent per pound, the importations were approximately 2,500,000 pounds. By the act of 1909 the duty was changed so that alum, alum cake, and so forth, containing not more than 15 per cent alumina and more than three-tenths of 1 per cent of iron oxide carry a duty of one-fourth of 1 cent per pound, while above that 15 per cent the duty is three-eighths of 1 cent per pound. Under that law importations for 1910 show an increase of 1,000,000 pounds, or more than 40 per cent, while in 1911 there was a further large increase.

Under the proposed bill the classification is changed and the duty reduced more than half.

Sodium sulphide is another example. At three-eighths of a cent per pound the concentrated product contains double the quantity of sodium sulphide per pound of product, and naturally is entitled to proportionately greater protection. The proposed law solves the problem by reducing the duty on each to a quarter of a cent per pound, when long experience has shown that even three-quarters per pound on one product was hardly equal to the three-eighths per pound imposed on the low-strength article. The same criticism can be made of sodium sulphate, sodium silicate, anhydrous bichloride of tin, and other salts, which it is proposed to reduce in some cases to one-half and in some cases to one-third of the former duties.

On sulphide sodium crystals the duty is reduced one-eighth of a cent per pound, viz, from three-eighths of a cent to one-quarter of a cent per pound, while on the concentrated product the duty is reduced one-half of a cent per pound, or from three-quarters of a cent to one-quarter of a cent per pound. In other words, the total duty on 2,000 pounds of sulphide sodium crystals, which makes 1,000 pounds of concentrated sulphide sodium, would be $5 as against a duty of $2.50 to be paid on the concentrated, although the potential value to the consumer of the two articles is identical. Even under the existing law this concentrated product from Germany is making serious inroads upon our markets, and should the proposed law go into effect we would have to abandon the manufacture of this product. The same illogical treatment has been accorded the various strengths of chloride zinc, which are all taxed one-half of a cent per pound.

YELLOW PRUSSIATE OF POTASH.

The House bill reduces the duty on yellow prussiate of potash from 4 cents a pound to 1¼ cents a pound, and on yellow prussiate of soda from 2 cents a pound to three-quarters of a cent per pound, while the duty on refined carbonate of potash, the principal raw material from which prussiate of soda is made, is one-half of a cent per pound, although under the existing law it is on the free list. There is also a surtax charged by the German Government on potash salts.

Nearly 59 per cent of the yellow prussiate of soda used in this country is imported now. The largest American manufacturers of yellow prussiate of soda, a Philadelphia, firm, which had been in business many years, closed out last November because they could see no future in the business for them. There is only one establishment in the country now producing yellow prussiate of potash, and should this bill become a law, as the president of that company said, it would close out immediately.

Labor costs in this country are 60 per cent higher than in England, and the cost of raw material is 40 per cent higher, whereas compared with Germany labor is 100 per cent higher in the United States. There is keen competition, and the price of yellow prussiate of potash has been reduced in the last 10 years from 18 to 13 cents.

The duties on bichromate of potash and bichromate of soda are both reduced, though heavy reductions were made by the existing law. Foreign manufacturers in Germany and in Scotland work together under an agreement or pool to maintain prices. One of the principal raw materials is muriate of potash, on which article, through the monopoly of the German potash syndicate and the arbitrary action of the German Government, American producers have been compelled to pay nearly $12 a ton more than they had contracted. German manufacturers of bichromate of potash in some instances are members of this potash syndicate. In England the process of manufacture is carried on continuously 7 days a week by men who work in two shifts of 12 hours each, and who receive in pay only 41 per cent of the wages paid in the United States in this industry. The reduction of duty proposed by this bill would simply open the American market to these foreign combinations at the expense of the American producers.

CAUSTIC SODA AND BLEACHING POWDER.

The average price of caustic soda in the United States has decreased since 1900 from $46.87 per ton to about $40 per ton, the present market price. This reduction in the cost of this article to the consumer has been effected in spite of the fact that its consumption in this country has increased during the same period from 59,000 to 170,000 tons, the total production during the year of 1911. Importations from abroad in 1890 amounted to about 40,000 tons, with a home production of about 10,000 tons. In 1900 the importations had decreased to 5,700 tons and steadily declined until the year of 1906, when they disappeared entirely.

It appears, therefore, that the American manufacturers of caustic soda have met the greatly increasing demand of the American consumer, lowered the prices to him, and driven out importations of this article from abroad. New enterprises engaged in the manufacture of this article have been started, and existing plants have extended their works and increased their facilities. Now it is proposed by the Underwood bill to cut the protective duty one-half. Such a reduction would be highly injurious to American manufacturers and would arrest the progress which has been made in cheapening the prices to producers. The foreign manufacturers will have an advantage along the Atlantic coast where the principal markets for this soda are found, as the ocean freight rates from abroad are less than inland railroad rates.

The cheapening of the price to the consumer is more notable in the case of bleaching powder than in that of caustic soda. Since 1892 the average price of bleaching powder has been reduced from $52 a ton to $25.60 a ton. In 1892 there were 55,000 tons imported and none manufactured in this country. In 1910 there were 47,000 tons imported and 60,000 produced in the United States. This result has been accomplished notwithstanding the heavy competition from abroad. Approximately one-half of the bleaching powder consumed by the home market is produced by domestic manufacturers using the electrolytic process. The manufacturers using this process to produce caustic soda are compelled to manufacture 2 tons of bleaching powder for each ton of soda. The only practicable manner yet discovered in which the chlorine gas released by electrolysis can be profitably and legally utilized is in the production of bleaching powder. The manufacturers are compelled by law to prevent the escape of this gas as being injurious to public health and property. They comply with the law by turning the gas to a commercial use.

Foreign manufacturers fix the price of bleaching powder abroad. By trade agreements among themselves, where there is no law to prevent, they are enabled to sustain high prices for the other chemical components of the raw material, and are thus able to treat the bleaching powder as a by-product, placing the whole commercial burden on the other components. That naturally leads them to use the American market as a dumping ground for their bleaching powder. To reduce the duty one-half as proposed by the Underwood bill would help these foreign producers at the expense of their American competitors.

Chlorine gas enters into the manufacture of liquid chlorine, sulphur chloride, benzyl, and naphthalene chlorides, and many miscellaneous articles, as well as indigo, which is not manufactured in this country. The market for these products is very small and the volume of business, as a whole, would only, in a slight degree, reduce the amount of chlorine gas manufactured. It is proposed to reduce the duties on these articles, thus adding to the difficulty of the American producers.

CAFFEINE.

Paragraph 15 proposes to assess a duty of 75 cents a pound on caffeine, with the statement in the House report that the equivalent ad valorem per cent is 41.25, while, as a matter of fact, it is only 23.80 per cent, the correct value of caffeine abroad being $3.22 per pound and not $1.82 per pound, the stated average unit basis. In the same paragraph a duty of 1 cent per pound is proposed on the raw material—tea waste, tea siftings, and so forth—equivalent to about 40 per cent of its actual value or nearly twice as much on the raw material as on the finished product. The imports of caffeine under the existing law have grown to 40 per cent of the consumption in the United States, while there have been no exports. The change in the tariff rates, as proposed in the Underwood bill by reducing the duty and placing a duty of 40 per cent on the raw material, would annihilate the industry in this country, throw the workmen and chemists out of employment, and make useless a large investment.

Paragraph 18 of the House bill imposes a duty on chemical and medicinal compounds and preparations when containing alcohol. The present law provides for "chemical compounds, mixtures, and salts containing alcohol or in the preparation of which alcohol is used." By changing the wording there is no provision in the proposed bill for chemical compounds, mixtures, and salts in the preparation of which alcohol is used. There are a number of medicinal and chemical preparations which are prepared with the use of alcohol, but which do not actually contain alcohol as such in the finished product. One of the basic products for the manufacture of chloral hydrate is alcohol, but the finished chlorate does not contain alcohol as such, as in the process of manufacture it is converted into the chemical product of chloral hydrate. Therefore this product would come in under paragraph 5 at 15 per cent ad valorem duty instead of 55 cents per pound as now assessed. The same arguments hold good on phenacetin (acetphenetidin). It would be absolutely impossible to manufacture this product in this country in competition with Germany with only 15 per cent protection.

ACETATE OF LIME, CHARCOAL, AND WOOD ALCOHOL.

The proposed bill puts acetate of lime on the free list, though it is now dutiable at 25 per cent. It puts charcoal on the free list, which is now dutiable at 20 per cent. It makes the duty on wood alcohol 5 cents per gallon instead of 20 per cent, the present duty. These articles are manufactured in about 100 establishments in the United States, with an investment of about $25,000,000, and give employment and sustenance to about 75,000 persons. They are made from wood, and the wood is to a large extent that of tops, butts, and breaks of trees which have been cut into saw logs, thereby creating from what would otherwise be waste materials valuable commercial commodities and a wide field for the employment of labor. If this bill becomes a law, it will result in the building of a large number of new works in Canada, where wood is more than 20 per cent cheaper than in the United States, and the inevitable result would be to exterminate the American industry. Canada, with its vast areas of cheap raw materials, is offering every encouragement to the building up of the industry within its own borders by paying a large bounty on the manufacture of charcoal iron and a high price for wood alcohol used for denaturing purposes. With our market open to them, the Canadian production would increase rapidly, and they could also "dump" into the United States any surplus product.

In 1907 a free alcohol bill was passed which almost exterminated the wood-alcohol industry. The producers were reduced from a basis of 40 cents a gallon to about 15 cents a gallon, and that put them to a large expense in bringing in foreign apparatus to rehabilitate their industry. These factories are spread throughout the hardwood-lumber districts and high wages have to be paid to get the technical labor required.

Alizarin, natural or artificial, and dyes derived from alizarin or from anthracene are made dutiable in section 6 of the bill at 10 per cent ad valorem. Section 38 imposes the same duty on indigo, indigo extracts or pastes, and indigo carminated. All of these fast dyes, which have been on the free list since 1883, are not manufactured in the United States and never have been, and there is no question of protection involved. They were put on the free list to enable the textile industry in the United States to produce coarse goods which wear, so far as durability is concerned, equal not only to the textile fabrics made in other countries, but to the highest grade of textiles made here. Synthetic indigo sold for 72½ cents a pound in New York in 1894, and it now sells for 16½ cents a pound, this artificial article having taken the place of the indigo formerly used. A great industry has been developed in this country in the production of denims, indigo prints, chambrays, and ginghams, in which those dyes are used. Many other examples of equal force may be found in the dry-goods market. No other country in the world now produces the volume of fast-colored, coarse cotton fabrics manufactured in the United States, with the possible exception of China, where an indigo-dyed cotton cloth is the national dress.

The American Cotton Manufacturers' Association, representing mills in Virginia, North Carolina, Alabama, and elsewhere in the South, appeared before the Finance Committee to protest against the injustice done in the proposed duties on alizarin and anthracene and dyes derived from the same, including indigo. They are not made in this country, and could not be produced here under the duty proposed by the House bill. Synthetic indigo, which comprises practically all of the indigo now used in manufacturing, is a patented article produced chiefly in Germany.

The cotton mills, as one of their representatives told the committee, are having a hard time even now to meet British and other foreign competition. Those countries have these dyes free of duty. They pay the same for raw cotton as our manufacturers do, have much cheaper labor, lower cost of plant, and practically monopolize the trade in this class of goods in the South American countries, Cuba, Porto Rico, and the West Indies. This proposed legislation would enable them to extend their advantages to our own markets.

ALIZARIN ASSISTANT.

An illustration of the haphazard way in which the bill has been drafted is furnished in the duty provided for alizarin assistant. Castor oil is the component material of chief value in alizarin assistant. The oil is made dutiable at 20 cents a gallon, and alizarin assistant at 15 per cent ad valorem, without limitation as to castor-oil contents. Material imported and described as alizarin assistant by reason of the mixture of other substances incorporated therein could go to the point of 95 per cent castor oil, and the foreign substances could, after importation, be removed and leave the castor oil of sufficient purity for large commercial uses. The duty on the castor oil imported in that way would be only about one-half the duty imposed on castor oil imported under its own name. Previous tariff legislation has provided for alizarin assistant based on the castor oil contained in it. But that wise provision in the existing law has been thrown aside and the door opened wide for the importation of castor oil at about one-half of the duty provided for in the bill.

Then there is a provision in the same paragraph for "all other pressed oils and combinations of the same not otherwise provided for, 15 per cent." Nearly, if not quite, all such oils are capable of combination for importing purposes and separation thereafter, thus evading the specific duty provided for elsewhere. Alizarin assistant is used in connection with dyeing, and more especially in dyeing alizarin red, which is the modern name for all turkey red. The proposed tariff of 15 per cent ad valorem on alizarin assistant puts a premium on the imported goods. The Wilson bill carried a duty of 30 per cent on alizarin assistant, and a witness testified before the Finance Committee that he could not produce it in this country in competition with the imported product at that rate of duty. Now it is proposed to impose a duty of one-half of that of the Wilson bill. The cost of the American product f. o. b. Boston is 5½ cents a pound. A 50 per cent alizarin assistant made in England could be sold, duty paid, at less than 5 cents a pound in Boston under this proposed bill.

Castor oil, according to a manufacturer, costs a little above 9 cents a pound in Boston, while the foreign product could be sold under the proposed duty at the same point at 8¾ cents a pound. Hence this proposed bill would end the manufacture of alizarin assistant in the United States. The duty on it would be much less than the duty exacted on the oil in the castor bean, which comes in under another schedule and is not touched by the proposed bill. In other words, a manufacturer stated he would have to pay more duty on the oil that was in the bean than his competitor would pay on the article which had been manufactured from the beans into the oil and then from the oil into the assistant. The imports of alizarin assistant are now about 25 per cent of the total consumption. There has been a large increase in the imports of oils and seeds under the new tariff, amounting to nearly $5,000,000 increase of dutiable oils for the year 1911 as compared with 1909 and $21,000,000 increase in dutiable seeds in the same time and $10,000,000 increase in oils free of duty and $3,000,000 increase in seeds free of duty.

QUEBRACHO AND TANNING EXTRACTS.

The existing law imposes a duty of seven-eighths of 1 cent a pound on extracts of bark such as are commonly used for dyeing and tanning, and on extracts of quebracho not exceeding in density 28° Baumé one-half of 1 cent per pound, and exceeding 28° three-fourths of 1 cent per pound. The House bill makes the duty on extracts of quebracho and other extracts commonly used for dyeing and tanning three-eighths of 1 cent per pound. In addition to this large reduction in duty on these extracts, a provision is made for a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem on the raw materials—the woods, and so forth—from which the extracts are obtained when the wood has been advanced in condition by peeling. Such woods under the existing law are brought in free of duty. There is nothing that comes into this country in the way of raw material in sticks and wood that is not peeled. The bark naturally falls off or is peeled off when the wood is dry to save paying freight. To make this wood dutiable and then to reduce the duty on the manufactured article from three-fourths of a cent per pound to three-eighths of a cent would seriously affect the industry of producing such extracts in the United States.

A large manufacturer testified before the Finance Committee that if the bill became a law in its present shape, he would "go out of business," for the reason that he could not make it pay. He thought that this insertion of the word "peeling" in the law was some kind of a "joker" in the interest of the foreign producers of these extracts to prevent their manufacture in the United States. These raw materials have been coming in free for about 40 years, and now it is proposed to put a duty on them of 10 per cent by inserting the word "peeling." There is double the quantity of these extracts imported to what is produced in this country, and some grades are sold at such prices as to make it impossible to produce them in the United States. Moreover, competition in this business by home production has kept down prices as in other cases.

Another singular provision in the proposed bill is that of leaving out the distinction between liquid and solid quebracho extracts. The importers have ceased to bring in the liquid extracts because of the comparatively low duty on the solid. The existing law makes a duty of three-fourths of a cent per pound on the solid extracts, though it is evidently too low. Under the proposed law the duty is to be only three-eighths of a cent with a 10 per cent duty on the raw materials. The production in this country under the existing rate is one-third of the consumption and necessarily would cease altogether under the proposed law while there would be no increase in revenue. The largest manufacturers of logwood extracts are to be found in France, which has a prohibitive tariff on such extracts. England has a number of factories which are united into a trust that ships goods to the United States.

The quebracho trust in the Argentine Republic, which has a capital of $10,000,000 and which paid 24 per cent dividends on its common stock last year, will, of course, be greatly benefited by this proposed legislation. There is another large corporation in Argentina producing quebracho extracts, but they have made arrangements with the trust so the two now work together. The business outside of the United States is controlled almost exclusively by this trust, which is composed of Germans backed up by English capital; and they also control the industry in Germany. With the opposition of the American manufacturer removed they would control the business in the United States.

The Argentine manufacturers can produce solid quebracho extracts, containing 65 per cent tannin, for about one-third of the labor cost involved in producing an equivalent chestnut extract in the United States. The German and French Governments not long ago raised their duties to prohibitive rates, which has resulted in making the United States a "dumping" ground for surplus quebracho. From 1898 to 1904 the domestic manufacture increased two or three times in volume, but in recent years the capacity for output has been stationary, while the actual output has decreased. This in the face of the large increase in the consumption of the extract.

COAL-TAR PRODUCTS.

Manufacturers of coal-tar colors and coal-tar products vigorously protested before the Finance Committee against the proposed reduction of duty on their products, while at the same time taking their raw material from the free list and making them dutiable. They maintain that if any change is made in the rate for coal-tar dyes, it should be increased rather than decreased. The consumption of coal-tar dyes in the United States is about seven and a half million dollars' worth annually, of which only one and a half million dollars' worth is produced in this country, the other six million dollars' worth being imported.

By reducing the duty on the finished product, and making the raw material dutiable, the framers of the House bill assume an increase of a million dollars in the imports of this product. That would be equivalent to driving the domestic manufacturers out of business. If the purpose of making this change was to increase the revenues, this object will not be accomplished, for even if the importers should give the American consumers the benefit of the entire reduction of duty the consumption would not be stimulated. But importers will not lower their selling prices because they are given a large market in this country. On the contrary, to judge by past experience, foreign manufacturers with American competition eliminated would raise their prices, so that the final result would be higher prices to the American consumers and smaller revenues to the United States Government.

The mere fact that the industry now exists in this country is a restraining influence on the importers, and saves the American consumer the arbitrary exactions and high prices of the foreign manufacturers.

A manufacturer testified before the committee that he began the production of acids black, 2–B, direct blacks, G–extra, when the duty was 20 per cent, and he found that he could then make a reasonable profit. These colors had been selling at about the same price for many years, but when the American manufacturers began their production in sufficient quantities to disturb the importers, prices began to drop, and were cut in two, so that the domestic producers could not make any profit. In the revision of 1909 particular attention was paid to this schedule, with the result that American manufacturers have been enabled to increase their range of colors considerably. But they had only got fairly started when tariff agitation was renewed and now threatens the existence of their business.

An effort was made some 30 years ago to promote this industry. But the tariff in 1883 reduced the protection, with the immediate result that five of the new factories closed their doors and the remaining four struggled along in reversed conditions, hoping that some future revision would bring them relief. This came in 1909, and now they are again threatened with destruction by another Democratic tariff revision. The cost of establishing a coal-tar dye plant, designed for a yearly output of 3,000,000 pounds, with allowances for depreciation, is $1,134,800 in the United States, as compared with $780,600 in Germany. The employees necessary for conducting such a plant would be paid $116,236 in the United States, as compared with $61,493 in Germany, and the cost of raw materials under the present tariff would be $396,508 in the United States, as compared with $317,206 in Germany. In other words, the cost of producing 3,000,000 pounds of coal-tar dyes under the present tariff rates is $645,784 in the United States, as compared with $480,299 in Germany.

In many cases the most important so-called raw materials—that is, the intermediate products made from coal tar—are imported and are controlled abroad by two or three concerns which fix their own prices that the American manufacturers are compelled to pay. Hence any duty on these raw materials will be exacted from the American manufacturers in the way of increased importation prices. For instance, analine salt and oil are now controlled by a convention, consisting of German, English, and French manufacturers, who fix prices to suit themselves.

The "Glossary of Schedule A," as given in the report of the Ways and Means Committee, on page 203, says:

> The industry of coal-tar products in Germany, especially dyes, is in the hands of powerful combinations. While officially about 40 establishments are engaged in their manufacture, only 4 or 5 furnish the bulk of the production—about 90 per cent—and even these few firms work under an agreement not only to control prices but also to divide profits.

With this strong and powerful combination as the principal competitor of the American producers, it is needless to say that the American coal-tar industry requires all the protection heretofore granted. The coal-tar industry in the United States makes no plea for protection based on the idea of fostering an infant industry, but it asks for a sufficiently high protective tariff to compensate for the difference in wages paid in the United States as compared with the wages of Germany, and for sufficient protection to prevent this country from being made a "dumping" ground for the excess production in Germany.

The foreign trade in coal-tar products in the United States is entirely one-sided, the natural result of the comparatively undeveloped state of the industry in this country. The only item of exportation is coal tar proper, or the crude raw material, amounting in value, in 1910, to $138,834.

Germany exported in 1910 coal-tar dyes to the value of $44,623,000, of which nearly 22 per cent were exported to the United States, and more than 18 per cent to the United Kingdom. And this notwithstanding the fact that England supplied the world's requirement for staple inorganic chemicals long before Germany entered the field of manufacture in the industry of coal-tar products. The proudest achievement of the German chemical industry was developed with coal tar imported from wherever obtainable, and in the face of the fact that the industry originated in England and France, and had taken root in both countries. Although coal is more expensive in Germany than in England, Germany supplies its own huge requirements of coal tar, the indispensable raw material, and exports enormous quantities. Germany supplies over 85 per cent of the world's consumption of coal-tar dyes, although the United States is much better supplied with the raw material for the production of those dyes than is any other country.

PYROGALLIC ACID AND HYDROCHINON.

The owner of an establishment that was started about two years ago for the manufacture of pyrogallic acid, but which has not yet marketed any of that product, told the Finance Committee that if this bill became a law he would immediately abandon the undertaking. The machinery has to be made especially for the purpose, and he stated that it would be of no value for any other object, but under the reduction of duty as proposed by this bill they can not compete with the German manufacturers, who now have absolute control of this market. The price of pyrogallic acid, which is used for dyeing furs and medicinally to a small extent, and for photographic work, and so forth, varies in accordance with the competition between the foreign manufacturers. In 1908 it sold for $1.10 a pound, but strong competition on the other side caused it to drop to 64.1 cents in 1911. This is a temporary condition, and as soon as the foreign manufacturers settle their differences prices will go up again, but to reduce the duty below a protective point is simply to continue the American consumers of this product entirely at the mercy of the foreign manufacturers.

Hydrochinon, which is an acid used for the same general purpose as pyrogallic acid, was not manufactured in this country until about 18 months ago, when a factory was opened here. Immediately the price was dropped by the foreign producers for export purposes to this country below the cost to manufacture here, so that the man who had invested his capital in that business declared that he would immediately abandon it excepting that he could not dispose of his machinery. That is the condition that follows whenever duties are placed so low as to allow of such temporarily unfair competition or the "dumping" of the foreign product.

It is proposed to impose a duty of 10 per cent on paranitraniline, the raw material from which paranitraniline colors are made, and then to reduce the duty on the colors to 20 per cent. That would leave only 10 per cent protection. The difference in the wages paid in this industry in this country and in Germany requires a protection of about 7 or 8 cents, but under the proposed bill that would be reduced to about 3½ cents, which, of course, would allow the Germans to destroy the trade in this country.

HITTING THE PAINT INDUSTRY.

The Paint Manufacturers' Association found reasons similar to those of other organizations in protesting against the proposed increase of duties on raw materials and a decrease on the finished product. The paint manufacturers call attention to the fact that no opportunity was given them for a hearing by the House committee that prepared this bill, nor has the Tariff Board made any investigation into the production and cost abroad of articles used in their industry. The association asserts that the duties proposed show lack of familiarity with the paint business and as to what are raw materials of the paint grinder, but which are finished products of the dry-color maker from whom he buys. In like manner raw materials to the dry-color maker are, in many instances, the finished product of the chemical manufacturer, who in turn derives his raw materials from the mines bearing the necessary ores. In the case of the articles used in making prepared paints, principally linseed oil, it is the finished product of the crusher of flaxseed, who takes for his raw material the flax, the product of the farmer. The paint manufacturers call attention to the omission of any mention of flaxseed or of zinc and lead bearing ores in the preparation of this schedule, though they are directly connected with their industry.

Wages paid in the paint industry in this country are from two and a half to three times greater than those paid for similar labor in foreign countries, and to reduce the tariff under such circumstances necessarily means a proportionate reduction in the wage scale of the persons employed.

British statistics show that the raw materials in the paint and varnish industry are two-thirds of the cost of the finished product, and that is in accordance with the census returns of this industry in the United States. Crude materials are much cheaper abroad, transportation rates are lower, and the foreigners have many other advantages which can not be met under this proposed change in the duty. But in the preparation of this bill no attention apparently was paid to that fact.

Great strides have been made in the scientific preparation of paint, and a use has been found for the soja-bean oil to the extent of about 5,500,000 gallons in 1911, whereas a few years ago none was used. Now, it is proposed by this bill to transfer that product from the free list to the dutiable list. In the same way wood oil and other materials are made dutiable, and then a reduction of 10 per cent is made in the duties on the finished products.

The American paint industry is a large and growing one, having increased 40 per cent in five years, and shows sales in 1910 of $124,000,000. The industry should be guarded carefully and not treated in the careless and indifferent way that it has been done in this House bill. Rates are not by any means prohibitive under the existing law. Imports are brought in from various countries—England, Germany, Italy, France, and Spain.

The Senator from Maine, to bolster up the Democratic position on this theme, referred to the testimony of a number of witnesses, but I think it is a very, very poor case when he has to quote the evidence of a young man who designates himself as follows:

I am one of those optimistic, bigoted individuals who believe the American manufacturer can "clean 'em all up" if you will give him low-priced raw materials. I really believe he could do it with half the load removed and one hand tied behind his back. The American manufacturer to-day is a live wire, with heavy, brutal, tariff insulation. Strip even half of it off, and he will galvanize the commercial world into a "sit up and take notice" attitude that will be unparalleled in history.

Mr. President, Mr. Armstrong appeared before the Finance Committee and read his little essay. I have not time to analyze his testimony in full, but he was the party who testified that his profits were 40 per cent per annum and that he thought if the raw materials remained on the free list he could stand a reduction from present duties on paints. The Senator from Maine reached his conclusion upon the statement of this individual. Let us see how much Armstrong has invested in his business and who this man is who pretends to speak for an industry that produces millions and millions of dollars of goods per annum. Senator McCUMBER asked him this question:

But why should you not give these dear people, then, the benefit of 30 per cent off of those prices and bring them down to a basis of 10 per cent profit?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I might say in answer to that that theoretically you might be correct if I were purely a philanthropist. But I started in this business about 12 years ago with absolutely nothing. My business has grown so fast that I had to put nearly everything I made into machinery and buildings.

I asked him this question:

Senator SMOOT. When did you start in business?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. About 15 or 18 years ago.

An exaggeration within 10 minutes of 6 years did not seem to bother the young man.

Senator SMOOT. You spoke of making 40 per cent on your capital stock. What is your capital stock?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Our capital stock is about $40,000.

Senator SMOOT. That has all been made out of the business?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Practically.

Senator SMOOT. Has it not all been made out of the business? You said you started with nothing.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. With the exception of a few thousand dollars, I would say "yes." We had an old ramshackle plant, and it was hard to tell what was there. I could not tell you.

We are asked to change a schedule involving millions of dollars upon the testimony of this man, who says that he is an optimist and a bigot.

In Malaga, Spain, factory labor is paid at the rate of 36 cents a day, and the skilled labor, such as machinists, coopers, and engineers, at the rate of 54 cents a day. In France—Apt in Vaucluse—ordinary labor is paid 50 cents a day and skilled labor 60 cents a day. In London, England, the pay amounts to $4.88 for ordinary labor a week and $7 to $12 a week for skilled labor. But in the United States the paint factories pay for ordinary labor from $10 to $15 a week and for coopers, machinists, and engineers from $15 to $25, and for bricklayers $26.

GLUE AND GELATIN.

The House bill proposes to reduce the duty on gelatin valued not above 10 cents a pound from 2½ cents to 1 cent a pound; valued above 10 cents a pound and not above 25 cents, from an equivalent ad valorem of 25 per cent to 15 per cent; valued above 25 cents per pound, from an equivalent of 48.50 to 25 per cent. On glue there is a similar reduction.

There is the same difference in the cost of production in the United States and in foreign countries, due to wages paid in this industry, as in others, and the proposed duty of 1 cent a pound does not cover the difference in cost, which manufacturers testify is from 2.2 to 2.8 cents a pound more in this country than in Europe. This is exclusive of interest on investments, which would make the cost considerably greater in this country. The average rate of duty on glue and gelatin for the last 10 years has been considerably less than the average charge collected on all dutiable products.

Pleas have been put forth that the business is conducted by the packing-house interests. That was met in 1909 by affidavits showing that 65 per cent of the 100,000,000 pounds of the glue and gelatin produced in this country is made in factories that are entirely independent and are not owned or controlled by the packing houses. Practically the same conditions prevail to-day as was shown by the sworn statements in 1909.

I was very much surprised to hear the Senator from Maine reiterate that old worn-out charge. I have here the affidavits which were made by manufacturers of glue in this country representing 65 per cent of the product, swearing that they had no connection whatever with the packing industries of this country.

The only Glue Trust in the world is a German-Austrian syndicate, which now controls practically all of the desirable factories in Germany, Austria, Belgium, and all but one in Italy, and is extending its operations in France and Russia. This trust regulates the output of these foreign factories and absolutely controls the selling prices. An American agent of this concern has openly stated that the American market was used for a "dumping" ground for the surplus stock. The lowering of the duties as proposed by the House bill will give this foreign trust advantages that can not be overcome by home manufacturers. During the year of 1911 this European Glue Trust did not operate 19 of its plants, but these plants are ready for operation and would at once begin work when the opportunity to market the product is offered. Such a market would be offered by this reduction proposed in the House bill.

An American agent for this European trust has stated in a letter that 75 per cent of the entire continental glue industry is now under the trust control, "which pervades all countries of the European Continent."

Competition has resulted in keeping down prices to a uniform level, and glue is practically the only article in the list of animal products that has not advanced in price during the last three years. Prices of raw materials, on the contrary, have advanced, and the average of prices paid during the present year is higher than any average for more than 20 years.

The competition in this country is so severe that during the past year one factory has gone out of business entirely, a second one is winding up its business, and a third one has changed hands three times because of the unsatisfactory condition of the business. Very little glue is exported, and that which goes abroad is practically all specialties. They are not competitive glues. They are packing-house products, and the packing house alone has the raw material which can be used in the manufacture of these types of glues. For the last fiscal year $1,352,995 worth of glue and gelatin were imported into this country.

A portion of the raw material has been imported from foreign countries because the domestic production is not large enough to supply the demand. The decrease in duty as proposed would naturally divert a large amount of this raw material to foreign factories. During the fiscal year 1911 the imports of raw material amounted in value to $1,655,679. Germany, according to the statistics given by the Tariff Board, imported hide cuttings for 1910 to the value of $446,726, and exported $314,160, which shows only a small excess of imports over exports, while the imports into the United States furnish the raw material for about one-third of the hide stock glue produced in this country.

A decrease in the shipments of the raw material to this country would tend to lessen the amount of valuable fertilizer material now available to our farmers. It would also deprive the tanneries in this country of a market for a by-product which they now sell to glue manufacturers.

So far as gelatin is concerned, the national pure-food law imposes a greater cost in its production in this country than formerly existed because of the greater care that must be taken for food purposes. The European producers are not restrained by the same regulations.

PARIS GREEN ON THE FREE LIST.

The proposed law removes the duty from Paris green. It is now dutiable at 15 per cent. The president of the National Paint, Oil, and Varnish Association protested to the Finance Committee that this course would close every Paris green factory in the United States. The chief ingredients used in making Paris green are arsenic and sulphate of copper. The former is on the free list, and sulphate of copper, which is now dutiable at one-fourth of a cent a pound, is made free under the proposed schedule. Sulphate of copper is not imported to any extent. Arsenic can be bought in Europe as cheap as in this country, if not cheaper, as is shown by the importation of 3,000,000 pounds last year. As sulphate of copper can be bought, perhaps, cheaper abroad than in this country, and labor is so much lower in Europe, it is conclusive that Paris green can be made abroad at a lower cost than in the United States.

Canada has a duty on Paris green which it manufactures, and, of course, Canada could sell its product in this country. This bill would open our door to the foreigners who close their doors against us, and it would be an inducement to the American manufacturers to transfer their plants across the Canadian border, as many have branches there already.

Paris green is retailed at 30 cents a pound, but the manufacturer sells it at 11 and 12 cents a pound. Hence, if the duty were removed and the American factories closed, the consumers would not get Paris green at any less in price than at present. Moreover, the European syndicates control chemical production, and when they have this market in their power they will put up prices as they have done in other cases.

Blues, including Berlin, Prussian, Chinese, and Milori, are now dutiable at 8 cents a pound, and the proposed law reduces that rate to 20 per cent, or less than 3 cents a pound. This is an extremely drastic cut. Last year approximately 190,000 pounds of blues were imported, a very large proportion of the quantity consumed in this country, and this reduction in rate, it is claimed, will simply close out the American factories, as they can not compete, which is evident from the imports now. The chief ingredient used in making blue is prussiate of potash, and there are only two factories in America at the present time. They are not making any profits owing to foreign competition. Lithopone is reduced in duty under the proposed law from 1½ cents per pound to 15 per cent ad valorem, but no less than six-tenths of 1 cents per pound. This is another drastic cut. This industry was first started in the United States under the McKinley Act. There are at least five independent and competitive companies, and they have reduced the rates of the article from 7 cents per pound to 3¼ and 3¾ cents per pound. In spite of the present duty imports are large, amounting at the port of New York alone for the last fiscal year to 2,100 tons, in addition to the imports at other American ports. The production in this country in 1910 was 12,693 tons. The present cost in this country to produce this article is about 3 cents a pound, as against 2 cents in Germany.

STRIKING AT THE VARNISH INDUSTRY.

The proposition in the House bill to make the raw materials used in the manufacture of varnish dutiable would have the same effect as in many other cases of discriminating against the American manufacturer. The raw materials on which it is proposed to impose duties are either fossil gums not found in the United States or oils made from seeds or nuts which can not be grown in this country. The fossil gums, known under the general name of copals, are found in the Dutch East Indies, in Africa, and in South America. There were imported 10,916,609 pounds in 1911, valued at $615,002. The value per pound was generally from 3 to 16 cents, although some African copal was valued at 70 cents. The proposed duty of one-half cent per pound would increase the cost from 7 to 16 per cent, or an average increase of 9 per cent.

Kauri gum is also a fossil found only in New Zealand. It is the most important of all varnish gums. The imports in 1911 were 7,772,800 pounds, at prices ranging from 3 to 80 cents, with an average of 12¼ cents. The proposed duty is 1 cent per pound, which increases the cost 8 per cent. Damar is grown in Java and Sumatra. The imports in 1911 were 4,414,000 pounds, with an average cost of 10 cents per pound. The proposed duty of 1 cent a pound would increase its cost 10 per cent.

Gum shellac is made from the sap of a tree which grows in India. The imports in 1911 were 15,967,200 pounds, at an average price of approximately 15 cents per pound. The duty proposed is 1½ cents a pound, which increases the cost 10 per cent.

Gum copal and shellac also enter largely into the manufacture of varnishes, buttons, billiard and pool balls, hats, electrical supplies, and talking-machines records. No substitute has ever been offered for them. The talking-machine records made of these products are exported to various countries in competition with Germany, France, Italy, and England, and to impose a duty on the raw material will naturally interfere with the export business now conducted, as there is no duty in foreign countries on these raw products.

Chinese nut oil is expressed from tung nuts found only in China, and of that oil 4,088,800 gallons were imported in 1911. The proposed duty is 5 cents a gallon, which increases the cost at least 10 per cent.

Linseed oil is dutiable at 15 cents a gallon, and that, with rosin, turpentine, and naphtha, is produced in this country.

The other articles used in the manufacture of varnish are not produced in this country, and to place a duty on them would tend to increase the cost of materials used by the varnish maker from 6 to 7 per cent.

Once in a while in connection with a southern industry like that of resin—rosin—an effort is made to encourage it by imposing a duty on raw material now on the free list. Resin, as a residue from the distillation of turpentine, is the crude article not refined. It has been classed as a raw material by a decision of the United States Court of Customs Appeals. It is one of the materials used widely in the manufacture of common laundry soap and an imposition of a tax upon it would be a serious burden to manufacturers of such soap.

More soap is used in the United States per capita than in any other country. There are 436 manufacturing concerns making ordinary soap scattered widely throughout the different States. There is the keenest possible competition between them and they have $60,000,000 of capital and give employment to 15,000 persons. It is an industry that should be encouraged in every way possible, but the authors of this bill have taken steps to discourage it.

Coconut oil, palm oil, palm-kernel oil, soja-bean oil, bergamot, caraway, citronella, and various other ingredients necessary in the manufacture of soap are taken from the free list and made dutiable. The additional cost of soap due to these proposed duties on ingredients not produced in the United States would amount to 21 cents a box, or nearly one-fourth of a cent per cake. The result would be that every cake of soap would have to be sold at an additional cent or the size of the cake reduced, which is an important item to the users of this grade of soap.

Carbonate of potash and caustic soda, also used in soap making, are taken from the free list and made dutiable. The imposition of the duty on coarse kinds of gum resin seems to be altogether for the benefit of a corporation which now controls the market in resin and fixes the price.

PERFUMERY.

Mr. Theodore Ricksecker, of New York, representing the Manufacturing Perfumers' Association of the United States, testified before the Finance Committee as to what is certain to follow when a duty is reduced below a protective point. He equipped a factory in New York for making toothbrushes, and employed English, French, and American workmen, and produced the best toothbrushes made, as was conceded, he stated, personally by the best makers in Paris and London. The work was largely handwork, but the business grew rapidly. In 1884 there was a reduction in the tariff on toothbrushes from 40 to 30 per cent. That closed his factory and nearly ruined him. He testified that all the other factories of the kind closed and the industry has been dead ever since. That is a fair illustration of the effect of a reduction that went below a protective point.

Mr. Ricksecker also told of selling a bill of $300 worth of perfumery to a retailer in Berlin, Germany. A number of the members of the Reichstag in passing the store saw the American goods in the window and got up in the Reichstag and proposed an increased duty on perfumery. The bill was passed and the further shipment of perfumery to Germany was stopped.

The proposed law imposes a duty on almond oil, anise, bergamot, camomile, caraway, and other oils now on the free list, which are the raw materials of the perfumery industry. These oils are not used in the raw state, but are made into perfumery when utilized, compounded, and manipulated under American labor, capital, and skill. To make them dutiable would handicap the perfumery industry in this country for the benefit of the foreign manufacturers. To injure this industry would not only affect men and women directly employed, but the manufacturers of bottles, boxes, labels, and the various other articles used in marketing perfumery.

An exporter of American manufactured goods and also an importer of raw materials also protested against the duty of 20 per cent on perfumery raw materials. Perfumes are luxuries, and there seems to be no excuse for offering further advantages to foreign manufacturers of these products. Under the present law the duty on perfumery was advanced, but the imports have increased at the rate of about $200,000 a year. American perfumery is taxed because of the alcohol used in it. But the French manufacturer is allowed a drawback for the duty paid on his alcohol, which gives him a great advantage in this market, an advantage that will greatly increase under the proposed law of taxing the raw materials.

SUGAR OF MILK.

One of the articles that illustrates how an industry can be developed through a duty is sugar of milk. Not many years ago that article was imported, and the cost was from 40 to 45 cents a pound. There was only one manufacturer making it, located in Burlington, Vt. He was making a small quantity of sugar of milk, and using it in a child's food preparation. The duty was 3 cents a pound. It was proposed to raise the duty to 6 cents a pound. This manufacturer appeared and protested, saying that this was a country where milk was cheap and where milk sugar could be made as low as anywhere in the world, and that he did not want 6 cents a pound duty, because it would create competition. Nevertheless the duty of 6 cents a pound was imposed, and within two years the American sugar of milk was selling at 8½ cents instead of 40 and 45 cents. Later we began to export it to Germany, and Germany immediately put on a higher rate of duty to exclude the American article.

COPPERAS.

When the Wilson tariff law was in preparation a Member of Congress was asked to use his influence to retain the duty on copperas, and he replied that he could not do so as "everything in connection with copper must come in free." It looks as though that ignorant prejudice still exists. Copperas is made from what is known as "sludge," or "waste pickling liquor," vast quantities of which are produced wherever wire rods or tin plate are made. That acid liquor or sludge is not allowed to run into the rivers or sewers, but is used to make copperas. It is costly to produce and can not be carried on in competition with the low-priced labor and other advantages which the European manufacturers have. To put copperas on the free list would make that industry unprofitable in the United States and impose a further hardship on the manufacturer of tin plate, wire rods, and so forth.

PEANUT OIL.

Peanut oil, which is taken from the free list and made dutiable at 10 cents a gallon, is imported to use in the manufacture of butterine, for which the American oil is not suitable because of its taste. The west African peanut makes an oil that is tasteless and is a necessary ingredient in the manufacture of butterine. There seems to be no object gained in imposing a duty on it, as the revenue would be very small, and a duty would only increase the cost of butterine, which is used by many persons who desire a cheaper product than butter.

OLIVES AND OLIVE OIL.

The change of duty on both olives and olive oil under the act of 1909 has given a wonderful impetus to the olive industry in California. The business has increased over one-third in three years, and it is reported that 2,500 acres of young olive orchards are being set out at the present time. From an acreage of about 8,000 bearing trees four years ago there has been an increase to about 14,000 acres in the old and young orchards combined. If the olive industry is let alone, under the present tariff there will be a still larger increase in the immediate future. A reduction in duty as proposed by the House bill means about 20 cents a gallon on olive oil, or about $8 a ton. The manufacturers, because of strong competition, can not stand that loss, and it would have to fall on the grower. Those expert in the business assert that such a reduction would mean virtually the annihilation of the olive industry in both oil and pickles, as they can not produce olives at any such prices as would be necessary under the reduced rates of duty. It takes at least 5 years after the planting of an olive orchard before any returns are obtained, and from that time up to 10 years the young orchard will not produce fruit enough to pay for its care and cultivation, consequently it means an investment running between 10 and 12 years before the revenues exceed the cost of cultivation and care. There are thousands of acres of good land in California and Arizona well suited to the cultivation of olives. If the tariff were left alone as it is at present, this industry would rapidly grow, but the proposed change in duty would strangle it, for which there is no excuse.

SPICES AND MUSTARD.

To impose the same duty, 1 cent a pound, on both whole and ground spices would be a blow at the American industry. The higher prices paid for labor in this country and the pure-food law make the work of grinding much more expensive here than abroad. Most spices arrive here containing more or less moisture, and that would be dutiable at 1 cent a pound on the landed weight. There is a loss in weight in grinding, and there is some loss in packing, and a higher cost of accessories, such as labels, printing, cartons, cans, boxes, and cases, all of which make the imposition of the same duty on ground spices as on raw material unjust. The English would pay no duty on containers, only duty on net weight, which is subject to only small shrinkage by drying out. No crude spices arriving here wormy or damaged are allowed entrance, but they are used abroad in the grinding process, and after so treated the wormy or damaged article can not be detected. Paragraph 41 also proposes to assess a duty on cloves of 2 cents per pound, equal to about 20 per cent of their value, while vanillin, which is made from cloves, suffers a reduction of 50 per cent to 10 cents per ounce.

The proposed bill takes amber and amberoid from the free list and imposes thereon a duty of $1 a pound. This can only result in making more difficult the manufacture of pipes and smokers' articles in this country and to offer greater inducements to foreign manufacturers of these articles. The material is found only on the shores of the North Sea. At the request of southern planters, who said laurel wood could be used for making pipes in place of French brierwood, a duty was placed on brierwood, but it has been proved that the laurel wood is not suitable. To now put a duty on amber and amberoid is to add to the difficulties of the pipe manufacturers in this country and to assist the importers. Every tobacco user in the country will be affected by this increase if he smokes a pipe.

Mr. President, it seems to me that I have already called attention to enough of the inconsistencies in this bill to prevent any Senator from voting for it. I say again the man who drew the bill either did not know what he was doing or he cared nothing for the effect it would have upon American industries. The bill recites that it is "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes,' approved August 5, 1909." If the bill should become a law, the title of the original bill should be changed, and it should read something like this: "An act to provide revenue by encouraging the industries of foreign countries, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CATRON in the chair). The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, which is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the day following the passage of this act, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the rates of duty which are prescribed in the paragraphs of this act upon the articles hereinafter enumerated, when imported from any foreign country into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), and the said paragraphs and sections shall constitute and be a substitute for paragraphs 1 to 83, inclusive, of section 1 and of section 25 of an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

DUTIABLE LIST.

1. Acids: Benzoic acid, 5 cents per pound; boracic acid, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound; citric acid, 3 cents per pound; formic acid, 1½ cents per pound; gallic acid, 4 cents per pound; lactic acid, 1½ cents per pound; oxalic acid, 1½ cents per pound; phosphoric acid, 2 cents per pound; phthalic acid, 5 cents per pound; pyrogallic acid, 6 cents per pound; salicylic acid, 2½ cents per pound; tannic acid and tannin, 4 cents per pound; tartaric acid, 3 cents per pound; all other acids not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, 15 per cent ad valorem.

2. Acetic anhydrid, 2½ cents per pound.

3. Acetone, 1 cent per pound.

4. Albumen, blood, 2 cents per pound; egg albumen, 6 cents per pound.

5. Alkalies, alkaloids, and all chemical and medicinal compounds, preparations, mixtures and salts, and combinations thereof not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, 15 per cent ad valorem.

6. Alizarin, natural or artificial, and dyes derived from alizarin or from anthracene, 10 per cent ad valorem.

7. Alumina, hydrate of, or refined bauxite; alum, alum cake, patent alum, sulphate of alumina, and aluminous cake, and all other manufactured compounds of alumina, not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, 15 per cent ad valorem.

8. Ammonia, nitrate of, carbonate of, and muriate of, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound; phosphate of, 1 cent per pound; liquid anhydrous, 2½ cents per pound; ammoniacal gas liquor, 10 per cent ad valorem.

9. Argols or crude tartar or wine lees crude or partly refined, containing not more than 90 per cent of potassium bitartrate, 10 per cent ad valorem; containing more than 90 per cent of potassium bitartrate, cream of tartar, and Rochelle salts or tartrate of soda and postassa, 2½ cents per pound.

10. Balsams: Copaiba, fir or Canada, Peru, tolu, and all other balsams which are natural and uncompounded and not suitable for the manufacture of perfumery and cosmetics, if in a crude state, not advanced in value or condition by any process or treatment whatever beyond that essential to the proper packing of the balsams and the prevention of decay or deterioration pending manufacture, 10 per cent ad valorem; if advanced in value or condition by any process or treatment whatever beyond that essential to the proper packing of the balsams and the prevention of decay or deterioration pending manufacture, 15 per cent ad valorem; all the foregoing not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment: Provided, That no article containing alcohol shall be classified for duty under this paragraph.

11. Barium, chloride of, one-fourth of 1 cent per pound; dioxide of, 1½ cents per pound; carbonate of, precipitated, 15 per cent ad valorem.

12. Blacking of all kinds, and all creams and preparations for cleaning or polishing boots and shoes, 20 per cent ad valorem.

13. Bleaching powder, or chloride of lime, one-tenth of 1 cent per pound.

14. Bromin, 2 cents per pound.

15. Caffein, 75 cents per pound; impure tea, tea waste, tea siftings or sweepings, for manufacturing purposes, 1 cent per pound.

16. Calomel, corrosive sublimate, and other mercurial medicinal preparations, 15 per cent ad valorem.

17. Chalk, natural, ground or bolted, 10 per cent ad valorem; chalk, precipitated, suitable for medicinal or toilet purposes, 25 per cent ad valorem, but not less than one-half of 1 cent per pound; chalk put up in the form of cubes, blocks, sticks, or disks, or otherwise, including tailors', billiard, red, and other manufactures of chalk not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, 25 per cent ad valorem.

18. Chemical and medicinal compounds and preparations, including mixtures and salts, distilled oils, essential oils, expressed oils, rendered oils, greases, ethers, flavoring and other extracts and fruit essences, all the foregoing and their combinations when containing alcohol, and all articles consisting of vegetable or mineral objects immersed or placed in, or saturated with, alcohol, except perfumery and spirit varnishes, if containing 20 per cent of alcohol or less, 10 cents per pound and 20 per cent ad valorem; containing more than 20 per cent and not more than 50 per cent of alcohol, 20 cents per pound and 20 per cent ad valorem; containing more than 50 per cent of alcohol, 40 cents per pound and 20 per cent ad valorem.

19. Chemical and medicinal compounds and all similar articles dutiable under this act or the first section of the act cited for amendment, whether specially provided for or not, put up in individual packages of 2 pounds or less net weight (except samples without commercial value sent by mail) shall be dutiable at a rate not less than 20 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That chemicals, drugs, medicinal and similar substances, whether dutiable or free, imported in capsules, pills, tablets, lozenges, troches, or similar forms, shall be dutiable at not less than 25 per cent ad valorem.

20. Chloroform, 4 cents per pound.

21. Coal-tar dyes or colors, not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, 25 per cent ad valorem.

SEC. 2. That section 25 of the act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 25. That where imported materials on which duties have been paid are used in the manufacture of articles manufactured or produced in the United States there shall be allowed on the exportation of such articles a drawback equal in amount to the duties paid on the materials used, less 1 per cent of such duties: Provided, That when the articles exported are made in part from domestic materials the imported materials, or the parts of the articles made from such materials, shall so appear in the completed articles that the quantity or measure thereof may be ascertained: And provided further, That the drawback on any article allowed under existing law shall be continued at the rate herein provided. That the imported materials used in the manufacture or production of articles entitled to drawback of customs duties when exported shall, in all cases where drawback of duties paid on such materials is claimed, be identified, the quantity of such materials used and the amount of duties paid thereon shall be ascertained, the facts of the manufacture or production of such articles in the United States and their exportation therefrom shall be determined, and the drawback due thereon shall be paid to the manufacturer, producer, or exporter, to the agent of either or to the person to whom such manufacturer, producer, exporter, or agent shall in writing order such drawback paid, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

"That on the exportation of flavoring extracts and of medicinal or toilet preparations (including perfumery) hereafter manufactured or produced in the United States in part from domestic alcohol on which an internal-revenue tax has been paid there shall be allowed a drawback equal in amount to the tax found to have been paid on the alcohol so used: Provided, That no other than domestic tax-paid alcohol shall have been used in the manufacture or production of such preparations. Such drawbacks shall be determined and paid under such rules and regulations and upon the filing of such notices, bonds, bills of lading, and other evidence of payment of tax and exportation as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

"That the provisions of this section shall apply to materials used in the construction and equipment of vessels built for foreign account and ownership, or for the Government of any foreign country, notwithstanding that such vessels may not within the strict meaning of the term be articles exported."

SEC. 3. That on and after the day following the passage of this act all goods, wares, and merchandise previously imported and hereinbefore enumerated, described, and provided for, for which no entry has been made, and all such goods, wares, and merchandise previously entered without payment of duty and under bond for warehousing, transportation, or any other purpose, for which no permit of delivery to the importer or his agent has been issued, shall be subject to no other duty upon the entry or withdrawal thereof than the duty which would be imposed if such goods, wares, or merchandise were imported on or after that date.

SEC. 4. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

During the reading of the bill,

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate take a recess until this evening at half past 8 o'clock.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, would it not be better to continue and finish the reading of the bill and then take a recess?

Mr. LODGE. Let us finish the reading of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that the reading of the bill be concluded.

Mr. SIMMONS. I inquire on what page the Secretary is now reading?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are about 15 pages more to be read, as the Chair is informed.

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well, I will withhold the motion.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

RECESS.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate take a recess until half past 8 o'clock to-night.

The motion was agreed to, and thereupon (at 3 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 8.30 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

At 8.30 p. m., on the expiration of the recess, the Senate reassembled.

THE CHEMICAL SCHEDULE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The business before the Senate is the further consideration of House bill 20182.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20182) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill on behalf of the minority members of the Committee on Finance. On page 3 I move to strike out lines 3 and 4, which read as follows:

Alizarin, natural or artificial, and dyes derived from alizarin or from anthracene, 10 per cent ad valorem.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

The SECRETARY. On page 3 strike out lines 3 and 4, which read as follows:

Alizarin, natural or artificial, and dyes derived from alizarin or from anthracene, 10 per cent ad valorem.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. That Senator is necessarily absent, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]. If he were present I should vote "yea." In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. THORNTON (when Mr. FOSTER's name was called). I announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. FOSTER] on account of illness, and also that he has a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I will let this announcement stand for all subsequent roll calls during the evening.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. If I were privileged to vote I would vote "yea."

Mr. HEYBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote I should vote "yea."

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], and therefore I withhold my vote on this and all other questions on the bill this evening.

Mr. LODGE (when Mr. ROOT's name was called). I desire to announce the pair of the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] with the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. I will let the announcement stand for the evening.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably absent from the city.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BURNHAM. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CRAWFORD (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent. Not knowing how he would vote, I will withdraw my vote. If I were at liberty to vote I should vote "yea."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. I inquire if that Senator has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BRIGGS (after having voted in the affirmative). I understand that the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON] has not voted. I therefore withdraw my vote. I have a general pair with that Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS]. Were I at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who is detained from the Chamber on account of illness. I therefore withhold my vote on this question and all others this evening.

Mr. CRANE (after having voted in the affirmative). In the absence of the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER], with whom I am paired, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. I will transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], understanding that he has not voted, and vote "yea."

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I desire to announce the pairs of several Senators who are absent.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON].

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SANDERS].

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS].

The Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN].

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE].

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND].

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH].

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM].

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON].

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN].

The Secretary recapitulated the vote.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. WARREN] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER]. My colleague is absent from the Chamber on public business.

Mr. SANDERS (after having voted in the affirmative). Owing to a pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], I withdraw my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND (after having voted in the affirmative). I have just been informed that I was paired with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. I was not aware of that fact, but I am willing to abide the judgment of the Senator from Alabama as to that. There was some talk about my being paired until the 1st of July, so I withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that less than a quorum of Senators has voted upon this amendment, but in order to give an opportunity to secure a quorum, if it is so desired, the Chair will not announce the result.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that the vote ought to be announced and then the names of absentees called.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 0, as follows:

YEAS—35.

Ashurst	Clarke, Ark.	Lodge	Poindexter
Bacon	Cullom	Lorimer	Simmons
Borah	Cummins	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.

Culberson	Johnson, Me.	Reed	Watson
Curtis	Kern	Richardson	Williams
Davis	Lea	Root

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of no quorum, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. Before that is done, I am satisfied from the vote that my pair would vote in the same way as I would vote. Therefore I will let my vote stand without the announcement of the pair. I transferred it to the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], who has since returned to the Chamber, and that will give him an opportunity to vote.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Clarke, Ark.	Johnston, Ala.	Penrose
Bacon	Crane	Jones	Perkins
Borah	Crawford	Kenyon	Poindexter
Bradley	Cullom	La Follette	Sanders

Chamberlain	Gallinger	Oliver	Thornton
Chilton	Gronna	Overman	Townsend
Clapp	Guggenheim	Page	Wetmore
Clark, Wyo.	Heyburn	Paynter	Works

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, while the roll call has disclosed a quorum, it is apparent that on a vote there is no quorum present. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 8 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, July 3, 1912, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, July 2, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Clerk of the House, Hon. South Trimble.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth, let Thy blessing descend in all fullness upon us that our thoughts may harmonize with Thy thoughts, that our judgments may be in consonance with Thy judgment, and our acts conform to Thy will, that we may be the instruments in Thy hands for the furtherance of the plans which Thou hast ordained. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Clerk read the following communication:

JULY 2, 1912.

Hon. SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk House of Representatives:

I hereby appoint and designate Hon. T. W. SIMS, of Tennessee, to act as Speaker and preside over the House to-day.

CHAMP CLARK, Speaker.

Mr. SIMS took the chair as Speaker pro tempore amid applause.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make some corrections and extensions in remarks I made on the 24th, for the permanent RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the corrections will be made.

There was no objection.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the Army appropriation bill and consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; that general debate upon the bill be confined to two hours, one hour of which to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] and the other hour by myself, and at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered and final vote be taken upon the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the military appropriation bill be taken up and considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and that two hours of general debate be had, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] and the other half by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], and at the end of the two hours the previous question shall be considered as ordered and the bill voted on as a whole. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 25531) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I suppose the bill ought to be read at some time. I am not sure, under the unanimous-consent agreement, it would be read.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois, the bill has been read in the House several times; it is exactly the bill which passed the House, the identical bill.

Mr. MANN. That is the statement of the gentleman from Alabama, which I have no doubt is accurate, but the only way to test that is to have the bill read in the House. This is a new bill.

Mr. GARNER. In order to obviate the difficulty if the gentleman from Illinois merely wants to print the bill, why not have unanimous consent to print the bill at this point?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think every bill ought to be read at some time. I do not care which reading of the bill it is, but I take it the second reading would be dispensed with under the order, probably.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, if the bill is to be read, it might as well be read now as any other time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman withdraws the request?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 25531) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1913.

That the office establishments of the Quartermaster General, the Commissary General, and the Paymaster General of the Army are hereby consolidated and shall hereafter constitute a single bureau of the War Department, which shall be known as the Quartermaster Corps, and of which the Chief of the Quartermaster Corps created by this act shall be the head. The Quartermaster's, Subsistence, and Pay Departments of the Army are hereby consolidated into and shall hereafter be known as the Quartermaster Corps of the Army. The officers of said departments shall hereafter be known as officers of said corps and by the titles of the rank held by them therein, and, except as hereinafter specifically provided to the contrary, the provisions of sections 26 and 27 of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the permanent military establishment of the United States," are hereby extended so as to apply to the Quartermaster Corps in the manner and to the extent to which they now apply to the Quartermaster's, Subsistence, and Pay Departments, and the provisions of said sections of said act relative to chiefs of staff corps and departments shall, so far as they are applicable, apply to all offices and officers of the Quartermaster Corps with rank above that of colonel. The officers now holding commissions as officers of the said departments shall hereafter have the same tenure of commission in the Quartermaster Corps, and as officers of said corps shall have rank of the same grades and dates as that now held by them, and, for the purpose of filling vacancies among them, shall constitute one list, on which they shall be arranged according to rank. So long as any officers shall remain on said list any vacancy occurring therein shall be filled, if possible, from among such officers, by selection if the vacancy occurs in a grade above that of colonel, and, if the vacancy occurs in a grade not above that of colonel, by the promotion of an officer who would have been entitled to promotion to that particular vacancy if the consolidation of departments hereby prescribed had never occurred. The noncommissioned officers now known as post quartermaster sergeants and post commissary sergeants shall hereafter be known as quartermaster sergeants; the Army paymaster's clerks shall be known as pay clerks, and each of said noncommissioned officers and pay clerks shall continue to have the pay, allowances, rights, and privileges now allowed him by law: Provided, That no details to fill vacancies in the grade of major in the Quartermaster Corps shall be made until the number of officers of that grade shall have been reduced by 11, and thereafter the number of officers in said grade shall not exceed 46; and no details to fill vacancies in the grade of captain in the Quartermaster Corps shall be made until after the number of officers of that grade shall be reduced by 31, and thereafter the number of officers of said grade shall not exceed 100; and whenever the separation of a line officer of any grade and arm from the Quartermaster Corps shall create therein a vacancy that, under the terms of this proviso, can not be filled by detail such separation shall operate to make a permanent reduction of one in the total number of officers of said grade and arm in the line of the Army as soon as such reduction can be made without depriving any officer of his commission: Provided further, That whenever the Secretary of War shall decide that it is necessary and practicable, regimental, battalion, and squadron quartermasters and commissaries shall be required to perform any duties that junior officers of the Quartermaster Corps may properly be required to perform, and regimental and battalion quartermaster and commissary sergeants shall be required to perform any duties that noncommissioned officers or pay clerks of the Quartermaster Corps may properly be required to perform: Provided further, That such duty or duties as are now required by law to be performed by any officer or officers of the Quartermaster's, Subsistence, or Pay Departments shall hereafter be performed by such officer or officers of the Quartermaster Corps as the Secretary of War may designate for the purpose: Provided further, That there shall be a Chief of the Quartermaster Corps, who shall have the rank of major general while so serving, and who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from among the officers of said corps and in accordance with the requirements of section 26 of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, hereinbefore cited: Provided further, That when the first vacancy in the grade of brigadier general in the Quartermaster Corps, except a vacancy caused by the expiration of a limited term of appointment, shall hereafter occur that vacancy shall not be filled, but the office in which the vacancy occurs shall immediately cease and determine: Provided further, That the Quartermaster Corps shall be subject to the supervision of the Chief of Staff to the extent the departments hereby consolidated into said corps have heretofore been subject to such supervision under the terms of the existing law.

SEC. 5. That as soon as practicable after the creation of a Quartermaster Corps in the Army not to exceed 4,000 civilian employees of that corps, receiving a monthly compensation of not less than $30 nor more than $175 each, not including civil engineers, superintendents of construction, inspectors of clothing, clothing examiners, inspectors of supplies, inspectors of animals, chemists, veterinarians, freight and passenger rate clerks, employees of the classified service, employees of the Army transport service and harbor-boat service, and such other employees as may be required for technical work, shall be replaced permanently by not to exceed an equal number of enlisted men of said corps, and all enlisted men of the line of the Army detailed on extra duty in the Quartermaster Corps or as bakers or assistant bakers shall be replaced permanently by not to exceed 2,000 enlisted men of said corps; and for the purposes of this act the enlistment in the military service of not to exceed 6,000 men, who shall be attached permanently to the Quartermaster Corps and who shall not be counted as a part of the enlisted force provided by law, is hereby authorized: Provided, That the enlisted force of the Quartermaster Corps shall consist of not to exceed 15 master electricians, 600 sergeants (first class), 1,005 sergeants, 650 corporals, 2,500 privates (first class), 1,190 privates, and 45 cooks, all of whom shall receive the same pay and allowances as enlisted men of corresponding grades in the Signal Corps of the Army, and shall be assigned to such duties pertaining to the Quartermaster Corps as the Secretary of War may prescribe: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may fix the limits of age within which civilian employees who are actually employed by the Government when this act takes effect and who are to be replaced by enlisted men under the terms of this act may enlist in the Quartermaster Corps: Provided further, That nothing in this section shall be held or construed so as to prevent the employment of the class of civilian employees excepted from the provisions of this act or the continued employment of civilians included in the act until such latter employees have been replaced by enlisted men of the Quartermaster Corps.

SEC. 6. That the office establishments of The Adjutant General, the Inspector General, and the Chief of Staff of the Army are hereby consolidated, and shall hereafter constitute a single bureau of the War Department, which shall be known as the Bureau of the General Staff, and of which the Chief of Staff shall be the head. The Adjutant General's and Inspector General's Departments of the Army are hereby consolidated and merged into the General Staff Corps. The officers of said departments shall hereafter be known as officers of said corps and by the titles of the rank held by them therein, and, except as hereinafter specifically provided to the contrary, so far as the officers hereby transferred to the General Staff Corps, and the offices held by them, may be affected, the provisions of sections 26 and 27 of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the permanent military establishment of the United States," are hereby extended so as to apply to the General Staff Corps in the manner and to the extent to which they now apply to The Adjutant General's and the Inspector General's Departments; but nothing in said sections shall be held to apply to any officers of the General Staff Corps except the officers transferred to that corps from The Adjutant General's and Inspector General's Departments by the terms of this act, and nothing in said sections or in this act shall be held or construed so as to nullify or change any of the provisions of existing law as to the detail of officers for duty as Chief of Staff, or as to the period for which officers so detailed may serve, and no officer who shall have served four years as Chief of Staff shall, except in case of emergency or in time of war, be eligible for further service as Chief of Staff until after he shall have served for at least two years with the line of the Army or on such other duty not pertaining to the General Staff Corps as the President may direct. The officers now holding commissions as officers of the said departments shall hereafter have the same tenure of commission in the General Staff Corps, and as officers of said corps shall have rank of the same grades and dates as that now held by them, and, for the purpose of filling vacancies among them, shall constitute one list, on which they shall be arranged according to rank. So long as any officers shall remain on said list any vacancy occurring therein shall be filled, if possible, from among such officers, by selection if the vacancy occurs in a grade above that of colonel, and, if the vacancy occurs in a grade not above that of colonel, by the promotion of an officer who would have been entitled to promotion to that particular vacancy if the consolidation of departments hereby prescribed had never occurred: Provided, That, except as otherwise specifically provided in this act, after the consolidation of bureaus, departments, and corps hereinbefore provided for shall have been effected, no details to fill vacancies in the grade of colonel in the General Staff Corps shall be made until the number of officers of that grade in said corps shall have been reduced by 3, and thereafter the number of officers of said grade in said corps shall not exceed 10; and no details to fill vacancies in the grade of lieutenant colonel in the General Staff Corps shall be made until after the number of officers of that grade in said corps shall have been reduced by 4, and thereafter the number of officers of said grade in said corps shall not exceed 14; and no details to fill vacancies in the grade of major in the General Staff Corps shall be made until after the number of officers of that grade in said corps shall have been reduced by 7, and thereafter the number of officers of said grade in said corps shall not exceed 25; and no details to fill vacancies in the grade of captain in the General Staff Corps shall be made until after the number of officers of that grade in said corps shall have been reduced by 11, and thereafter the number of officers of said grade in said corps shall not exceed 10; and whenever the separation of a line officer of any grade and arm from the General Staff Corps shall create therein a vacancy that, under the terms of this proviso, can not be filled by detail, such separation shall operate to make a permanent reduction of 1 in the total number of officers of said grade and arm in the line of the Army as soon as such reduction can be made without depriving any officer of his commission: Provided further, That such duty or duties as are now required by law to be performed by any officer or officers of The Adjutant General's or Inspector General's Department shall hereafter be performed by such officer or officers of the General Staff Corps as the Secretary of War may designate for the purpose: Provided further, That when a vacancy in the grade of major general shall occur among the officers hereby transferred to the General Staff Corps that vacancy shall not be filled, but the office in which the vacancy occurs shall immediately cease and determine: Provided further, That officers now holding commissions as officers of either of the departments hereby consolidated with the General Staff Corps may at any time, in the discretion of the President, and shall, whenever they shall have served four years as members of said corps, be detached therefrom and assigned to duty with the line of the Army, or to such other duty not pertaining to the General Staff Corps as the President may direct, and they shall not be returned to duty in said corps until they shall have served for two years under detachment therefrom except in cases of emergency or in time of war, and during their detachment from said corps their places therein may be filled by the selection and detail, under such regulations as the President may prescribe, of line officers having the same rank, respectively, as the officers whose places said line officers are to fill: Provided further, That officers of the line of the Army who are now, or who shall hereafter be, detailed for service in any staff corps or department under the provisions of section 26 of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the permanent military establishment of the United States," may at any time, in the discretion of the President, be relieved from such service and returned to duty with the line: Provided further, That, in order to expedite the reduction of the number of officers of the consolidated General Staff Corps to the limit contemplated by this act, officers who now hold commissions as officers of either of the departments hereby consolidated with the General Staff Corps, and who are eligible for retirement from active service under any law existing at the date of the approval of this act, shall, upon their own applications, and may, in the discretion of the President, be retired from active service: Provided further, That all officers of the line of the Army now detailed for service in either of the departments hereby consolidated with the General Staff Corps shall be relieved from duty in said corps at the expiration of their present periods of detail, or sooner if the President shall so direct, and all officers hereafter detailed for service in said corps shall be relieved therefrom at the expiration of four years of such service, or sooner if the President shall so direct, and no officer who shall have served for four years under detail in said corps shall be eligible for further service therein until after he shall have served at least two years with the branch of the Army in which commissioned, except in case of emergency or in time of war: Provided further, That hereafter, when any officer shall, under the provisions of section 26 of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the permanent military establishment of the United States," be appointed or reappointed to an office with rank above that of colonel his appointment to said office and his acceptance of the appointment shall not create a vacancy in the arm, corps, or department from which he shall be appointed, but he shall retain therein the same relative position that he would have held if he had not been appointed to said office, and he shall return to said relative position upon the expiration of his appointment to said office unless he shall be reappointed thereto.

SEC. 7. That hereafter no vacancies occurring in the grade of major general in the line of the Army shall be filled until the number of officers of that grade shall have been reduced by three, and thereafter the number of officers of said grade shall not exceed four; that hereafter no vacancies occurring in the grade of brigadier general in the line of the Army shall be filled until after the number of officers of that grade shall have been reduced by five, and thereafter the number of officers of said grade shall not exceed 11; and for the purposes of this act general officers not commissioned as officers of any of the staff corps or departments of the Army shall be regarded as general officers of the line: Provided, That hereafter the number of officers above the grade of colonel who shall be members of the General Staff Corps under the provisions of section 3 of the act of Congress approved February 14, 1903, entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the Army," shall be two: Provided further, That hereafter service as a cadet of the United States Military Academy or as a naval cadet or midshipman shall not be counted in computing for any purpose the length of service of any officer of the Army: Provided further, That hereafter service as a cadet, naval cadet, or midshipman at either the United States Military or Naval Academies, exclusive of the sea service as prescribed by law upon completion of the academic course and preliminary to final graduation at the latter institution, shall not be counted in computing for any purpose the length of service of any officer of the Army.

SEC. 8. That the appropriations herein provided for the several departments consolidated under this act shall be available for the consolidated corps herein created.

SEC. 9. That nothing in this act shall be held or construed so as to separate any officer from the Army or to diminish the rank now held by him, and that all laws and parts of laws, so far as they are inconsistent with the terms of this act, be, and they are hereby, repealed.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield temporarily?

Mr. HAY. I will.

RETURN OF BILL FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the resolution which I have sent to the Clerk's desk in relation to the bill (H. R. 23515) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors. The word "of" before the word "dependent" should be "and." The bill is in the hands of the President, and the resolution requests its return from the President.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 57.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring): That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 23515) entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 6847. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 1754. An act to correct the military record of William F. McKim;

S. 6925. An act to authorize the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River near the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri; and

S. 6252. An act to relinquish the title of the United States to certain property in the city and county of San Francisco, Cal.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. BURNHAM, and Mr. GORE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

S. 5623. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 6084. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 6340. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 6384. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers or sailors;

S. 6851. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. 6978. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to return to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 25069) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to joint resolution (S. J. Res. 100) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit the continuation of coal-mining operations on certain lands in Wyoming, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SMOOT, Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, and Mr. CHAMBERLAIN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, the Army appropriation bill which has just been read is the bill which originally passed the House on February 16, 1912. It is not the bill which the President vetoed. Of course an Army appropriation bill had to be reintroduced in order to provide for the maintenance of the military establishment by reason of the President's veto. This bill carries $87,777,257.18, which is a reduction of $4,910,528.79 over last year's bill, and is $9,150,731.80 below the estimates for the present fiscal year. I hardly deem it necessary to make any remarks upon the various provisions of this bill because they were very fully discussed when it was before the House, and therefore in what I shall have to say I will refer more to the veto sent in by the President of the United States than to the particular bill.

For many months the officials of the War Department have sought, through the public press and in other ways, to create the impression that the Army bill contained provisions hurtful to the Army and injurious to the various branches of the service. This, in face of the fact that most of the principles contained in the bill have been approved by the War Department, notably the consolidation of the supply corps and the general service corps. The bill as presented by the conferees of the two Houses contained nothing which could justly be called revolutionary, and contained much that is of great advantage to the country and the Army.

The statement in the veto message of what the bill contained when it passed the House can have no bearing upon what was in the bill when it was sent to the President, and why this was injected into the message is not apparent, unless the President wanted to befog the issue. The statement that the Senate "by a decisive vote struck all this new and affirmative legislation from the bill" is not true, the fact being that the only provision in the House bill upon which the Senate took a recorded vote was the provision with regard to the cavalry regiments.

The President deals at some length with what he calls "the dangers inherent in the practice of attaching substantive legislation to appropriation bills." He argues that such legislation should only be attached to appropriation bills "when the desirability of the enactment was recognized and acquiesced in by the common consent of both the Executive and of Congress." Such an interpretation of the rights of the executive branch of the Government is subversive of all the history of legislation which has been obtained from oppressive and reluctant Executives, and if it is to be acquiesced in by Congress, the day is not far distant when Congress will become merely an agent to register the wishes of the Executive. Congress has a right to legislate in any way it pleases; the President, of course, has a right to exercise his veto power, but he has not the right to dictate to Congress the manner or mode in which it may transact its business. The right to legislate on appropriation bills is one which Congress can never give up without jeopardizing the liberty of the people, and this is particularly true of the Army appropriation bill. The history of legislation on Army appropriation bills for the last 10 years discloses the fact that a very large portion of Army legislation has been carried on these bills, and especially is this true of the Army bill for last year. The President's contention amounts to this: That he will sign any appropriation bill if the legislation carried in it is approved by him, but if he does not approve the legislation he will veto it and argue that it is a bad thing for appropriation bills to carry legislation. The bill signed by the President in 1912 carried a large amount of legislation which added to the expenses of the military establishment, and it would seem from this that the President is willing to sign an appropriation bill carrying legislation which takes money out of the Treasury, but is unwilling to sign a bill which has for its purpose the economical administration of the Army.

The President states that the legislation in this bill was hasty and imperfect. This is not true. The legislation was carefully considered by the Military Affairs Committee of the House. Officers of the War Department, including the Secretary of War, were heard at length, and the principles of the bill in most respects were indorsed by them. The bill was debated for some time in the House of Representatives and hearings upon the bill were had before the Senate committee. After giving the general reasons for his veto, the President urged several specific reasons, the first of which was as to the qualifications for the Chief of Staff of the Army. This objection is based on insufficient grounds and a very imperfect conception of the qualifications which are essential to the safe and efficient discharge of the duties of this position. The only purpose which can justify the maintenance of our Army is the purpose of fighting. The fighting part of the Army is preeminently the line, and to that part all other parts are merely contributory. The position of the Chief of Staff under existing law is that of adviser of the President and Secretary of War in military matters. No man is competent to give sound advice relative to the principal part of the Army—the line—unless he has a practical knowledge of it. Such knowledge can only be acquired by actual service in the line as a commissioned officer thereof in grades not above that of colonel. It is true that past wars have developed great commanders, who, under legislation such as that now under consideration, would not have been eligible for service in the position of Chief of Staff in time of peace.

But there is nothing in that legislation to prevent the advancement of such military geniuses in future to the very highest command, including the command of the whole Army, either in time of peace or war, or to prevent their detail as Chief of Staff in time of war or when war is imminent. It is a mistake to say that the position of Chief of Staff is "the highest post in the Army." The Chief of Staff is not a commander, but is merely a staff officer, with no authority of his own by virtue of his position. The highest position which can be held by any officer of the Army is that of its commander. The requirement that in time of peace the Chief of Staff shall have some practical knowledge of the line of the Army does not restrict the power of the President, either in peace or war, to assign to a far higher position or command of the whole Army any person of future military genius, regardless of the amount of his line service, or even if he has had no line service at all. Under the existing Army regulations there is no military head of the Army, the President's command over it being exercised through the Secretary of War, with no second in command. It is therefore apparent that the Chief of Staff, who is the military adviser of the President and the Secretary of War, should have a good practical knowledge of the fighting branch of the Army, the line, to which all other branches are secondary and concerning which the President and Secretary of War most frequently require accurate information and sound advice. The chiefs of the various staff corps are close at hand to give expert advice and accurate information concerning all matters pertaining to the staff branches of the Army. But there is no one except the Chief of Staff to advise upon matters pertaining to the line, the largest and most important part of the Army. Then it is imperative, as the law now provides, that a Chief of Staff should be a general officer. It is equally as imperative that he have knowledge of and experience in the line, so that grave mistakes may not be made, which certainly will be made if an aggressive and erratic officer without line service and with no knowledge except such as may be gained by a staff officer or a high general officer should be detailed to the position of Chief of Staff. The knowledge, so necessary to a Chief of Staff, can never be acquired except through experience in the line. It can not be supplied by any amount of pretense, misrepresentation, sophistry, self-assertion, or arrogance, even though they may be backed up by strenuous official support and by an assiduously cultivated newspaper claque.

In the organic Chief of Staff act of February 14, 1903, which was approved by the Secretary of War—Root—Congress, in the exercise of its statutory right to make rules for the government and regulations of the land and naval forces, adopted a provision which rendered all officers of the Army except general officers ineligible for detail to the position of Chief of Staff. To carry this restriction a little further by requiring that in time of peace a general officer, to be eligible for this detail, must have service for 10 years with the line of the Army as a commissioned officer below the grade of brigadier general was not an infringement upon the right of the President, nor did it restrict unduly his choice for this detail, but was a proper and wise exercise of the indisputable right of Congress. The staff act never contemplated that any other than a general officer of the line should be Chief of Staff. The duties performed by Engineer and Ordnance officers fit them in no possible way to discharge the duties of Chief of Staff. It is idle to say that the restriction in question puts a premium upon mere routine service and that it tends to confine the choice to men who have had least staff experience. All that it does is to exclude the manifestly unfit, who had little or no experience except staff experience. It leaves the door wide open to all others.

In this connection it should be observed that under the operation of the law requiring vacancies occurring in various staff corps of the department to be filled by the temporary detail of officers of the line the time is not far distant when all the staff corps and the departments, except the Medical Corps, the Engineer Corps, and the Judge Advocate General's Department, will be filled from top to bottom with temporarily detailed line officers, all of whom will be both eligible and qualified, so far as long service in the line is concerned, for detail to the position of Chief of Staff whenever they attain the requisite rank. It is not true that the legislation in question was aimed at any particular officer. On the contrary, the conferees who framed the provision were actuated solely by the conviction that such a general requirement of the law is not only wise but that it is demanded in the interest of the War Department, the Army, and the country. Moreover, the conference committee took special pains to frame the provision so that it should not apply to the present Chief of Staff until his detail as such should be terminated, in accordance with existing Army regulations.

With reference to the President's second objection, it is not a fact that the proposed reduction in the number of officers detailed for duty in the General Staff Corps would tend in the least degree "to cripple the most important corps in the Army"; nor is there any basis for the prediction that it would "make necessary the reduction of the work of the War College." The General Staff Corps as now organized, exclusive of the Chief of Artillery and the Chief of the Militia Division, both of whom are additional members of it, consists of 45 officers, to wit, 3 general officers, 4 colonels, 6 lieutenant colonels, 12 majors, and 20 captains. The legislation in question proposed a reduction of 1 general officer, 1 colonel, 2 lieutenant colonels, 4 majors, and 10 captains, making a total reduction of 18 officers, and rendering all of them available for assignment to meet the persistent and clamorous demand for more officers for duty with the line and elsewhere. It has long been manifest that the membership of the General Staff Corps is greatly in excess of that required for the full and efficient discharge of any and all of the legitimate duties of that body. When the corps was about to be organized its sponsors declared, and Congress distinctly understood, that only a minor part of the members of the corps would be stationed in Washington and that the major part would be distributed through the Army, its members being assigned to duty at the various division and department headquarters. Secretary of War Root, the father of the General Staff act, who had a hearing before the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives on December 13, 1902, with regard to the proposed General Staff Corps, said:

> A portion of the members of the corps would be stationed in Washington to conduct the general business falling under the heads enumerated in the description of the duties which I have already read, and a portion of them—the larger portion of them—would be assigned to the different departments to serve under the different department commanders.

But from the very beginning it has been apparent—at least to those fully advised as to the real situation—that there has never been enough legitimate General Staff work, either at division or department headquarters, or at Washington, or at all these places combined, to give appropriate employment to anything like the number of officers now and heretofore authorized for the General Staff Corps.

The result has been that from the first relatively few General Staff officers have been kept with the Army in the field and that a disproportionately large number of them has been kept in Washington, where their superfluousness would be less conspicuous than it would be at department headquarters and where, too, some employment could be provided for them by turning over to them details of administrative work that belong exclusively to and should be disposed of in the various bureaus of the War Department. When the War Department about a year ago deprived department commanders of all of their administrative and of much of their executive authority, it was no longer possible to find even the pretense of employment for General Staff officers at department headquarters, and consequently it was necessary to bring still more of these officers to Washington to swell still further the already excessive number of such officers stationed here. Examination of the last accessible issue of the Army List and Directory discloses the fact that of the entire number of 45 General Staff officers proper allowed by law only 10 are on duty outside of Washington, whereas all of the remainder, 35 in number, are stationed here. If the Chief of Artillery and the Chief of the Militia Division, who are additional members of the corps, are included in the enumeration, they will increase to 37 the number of General Staff officers stationed in this city as against 10 stationed or on duty elsewhere. This showing is directly the reverse of that which Secretary Root declared to be proper, and would of itself be convincing evidence that the present allowance of General Staff officers, as fixed by law, is far in excess of the number for which appropriate employment can be found; but there is more direct and conclusive evidence to the same effect. The Army List and Directory abovesaid shows that of the 35 General Staff officers proper stationed in Washington 25 are on duty in the office of the Chief of Staff and 10 are on duty at the War College, an institution that forms no part whatever of the General Staff establishment, although, like many other educational institutions of the Army, it is subject to the supervision of the Chief of Staff. It is plainly improper, as it is unnecessary, that these 10 officers should occupy positions in the General Staff Corps while actually under assignment to the War College. If qualified for that duty, they could quite as well be detailed for it directly from the line, just as instructors are detailed for duty at the Military Academy and other Army schools. A continuing detail in the General Staff adds nothing to their qualifications for War College work, and merely fills places on the General Staff that ought not to be filled at all. It must be evident to anyone that the real reason for detailing these 10 General Staff officers as such to the War College, instead of detailing them directly from the line or first relieving them from the General Staff if already detailed thereon, is that the number of officers allowed by law to the General Staff is greatly in excess of the number for which appropriate and necessary General Staff employment can be found. One of the principal reasons urged for the detail system was that all officers of the Army would in time be detailed to the various staff corps. If officers detailed to the General Staff Corps are to be kept there for a long time, the object desired will not be accomplished. There are other General Staff officers in Washington who ought not to be here.

It is a notorious fact, well known to everyone in reasonably close touch with War Department affairs, that much, if not most, of the time of the Chief of Staff and his 24 immediate assistants is devoted to a mass of business that properly pertains to the various bureaus of the War Department and that is entirely foreign to the work for which the General Staff was created. Secretary of War Root was emphatic in the declaration that the members of the General Staff Corps should not be permitted to meddle with the details of administrative work, but that all such details should be kept, as before, in the various bureaus to which they pertain, and that the initiative and responsibility of the bureau chiefs with respect to business pertaining to their bureaus should be in no wise diminished by any activities of the General Staff. If Mr. Root had remained longer at the head of the War Department, he would have impressed his own wise views so strongly upon all concerned that much of the trouble which has followed the creation of the General Staff would not have occurred, but he left the department soon after the General Staff was organized and before his well-considered views as to its proper functions and relations could be crystallized into a firmly established practice. His successors have known or cared little about the principles which he laid down, and generally they have left the General

Staff and the bureaus to work out the situation as best they could, the staff naturally reaching out constantly for more power and authority, and the bureaus very naturally striving to preserve their autonomy and to retain the management of the business for the transaction of which they were created and are maintained by law. Although there was always more or less friction between the General Staff and the bureaus, due to lack of a well-established line of demarcation between their respective spheres of activity, none of this friction appears to have been serious until during the last two or three years. Since that time there has been much interference by the General Staff with the bureaus, and a determined and successful attempt to grasp for the General Staff much work of an administrative character that properly belongs to the bureaus and in which the General Staff has no proper concern. This course has been pursued partly because of a desire for the aggrandizement of the General Staff, but there is no doubt that the principal reason for pursuing this course was the necessity of finding some occupation for a lot of General Staff officers for whom there was, and still is, little or nothing to do in the way of necessary and appropriate General Staff work. For this reason the bureaus were raided, their work thrown into confusion and delayed, and their chiefs humiliated and disheartened; and that is the situation to-day. The public business suffers through delay and incompetent handling, and there is a great amount of expensive and wholly unnecessary duplication of work, a duplication which has no excuse and which is only done for the purpose of giving idle hands something to do. That the above is a true presentation of conditions as they now exist in the War Department can be readily established by inquiring of officers of the bureaus most concerned, and who are conversant with the facts. There is not the slightest doubt that a greater reduction than the 18 proposed by the legislation in question could be made in the membership of the General Staff Corps without interfering at all with any proper and necessary General Staff work.

It is not true that by the enactment of legislation such as that in question—the organized personnel of many of the most important bureaus and corps of the War Department and the military establishment will be disintegrated and the work proceeding under them will be seriously impaired.

The few instances cited in the veto message in support of this sweeping general assertion are by no means justified. The details of line officers to the various staff corps and departments are governed by the Army reorganization act of 1901, as amended, and no change of importance is made in that law by the new legislation under consideration. Under existing law, colonels and lieutenant colonels of the line who have served by detail for four years in any of the staff corps of the War Department are eligible for further detail therein without returning to the line and serving with it for two years, as is now required of all line officers below the grade of lieutenant colonel while in any staff corps or departments, except the Ordnance Department. The new legislation especially exempts the Ordnance Department from the operation of the new provision with regard to this particular matter, but it would require colonels and lieutenant colonels serving for four years by detail in a staff corps or department other than the Ordnance Department to return to the line for two years' service therewith before such detail in the staff, just as is now required of all detailed line officers below the grade of lieutenant colonel, except those detailed in the Ordnance Department.

No other change with regard to this class of details was proposed by the new legislation. Only colonels and lieutenant colonels would be affected by it, and the number of places open or expected to be open to the detail of officers of these high grades is relatively so very small that any little inconvenience that would result from this particular requirement with respect to them would be of no importance. It would sink into insignificance as against the importance, so often and so vehemently insisted upon by the Chief of Staff and the Secretary of War, of having detailed officers after completing a tour of staff service return to the line and serve therewith for considerable periods before returning to staff duty. If this rule is a good one for the many officers below the grade of lieutenant colonel, it is difficult to see why it should not be equally good for the relatively few officers of the grades of lieutenant colonel and colonel to whom staff detail is or will be opened.

It is true that the proposed change in the law would remove two of the officers from the Insular Bureau. One of these officers, as shown by the report of the Secretary of War, published in Senate Document 288, Sixty-second Congress, is a major of Infantry, who, out of a total commissioned service of about 26 years, has served only 9 years and 4 months with the line organization to which he has belonged, and who has been continuously absent from his regiment for more than 9 years last past, being on detailed service in the General Staff Corps and Insular Bureau during the whole of that period. The other officer who would be relieved from the Insular Bureau is a captain of Infantry, who, out of a total commissioned service of about 16 years, has served only 5 years and 6 months with the line organization to which he has belonged, and during the last 13 years has served only a little more than 3 years with his regiment, and during the last 6 years has been continuously absent from his regiment, being detached during the whole of that time for service in the General Staff Corps and in the Insular Bureau. These two cases show very flagrant violation of the rule so strenuously insisted upon when it is convenient or desirable to insist upon it for returning officers to the line for considerable service therein after four years' detached service.

The President was very unfortunate in citing these cases in support of the objection to the legislation which would require such rotation of service. It is impossible to see why the rotation of service which is required by law in all the great staff corps and departments in which details are made from the line should not be required also in the not very important Insular Bureau. It is the fault of the Executive that the abuse of excessive detached service has been permitted in that bureau, and it is time that the abuse be corrected by legislation which shall make it impossible in the future. Substantially the same comments are applicable to the matter of details of officers of the Army for duty with the Philippine Constabulary. It is simply absurd to contend that unlimited details with that civil organization are nearly as necessary or advisable as they are in the great staff corps and departments of the Army, in which they are prohibited by law. It is entirely the fault of the Executive if officers have been permitted to remain on detached service with this organization for an excessive length of time or if conditions exist which will render it difficult in the course of six months to replace in it officers who ought long ago to have been returned to the commands to which they belong. This particular ground of objection to the legislation under discussion shows clearly the necessity for its enactment. It is true that the provision in question would relieve from subordinate positions under the Isthmian Canal Commission a few line officers who have been absent from their organizations longer than they should have been. But it is understood that the head of that commission has admitted that the relief of these few officers would not seriously embarrass him. The objection that the provision would relieve, or might be construed so as to relieve, the engineer officers and other staff officers detailed for duty in connection with the Panama Canal is not well founded. Any such construction of the provision would be most unreasonable, and it is not to be believed that the Executive would place any such construction upon it. In the first place, the provision applies to officers not above the rank of major, and it is known that the engineer and other staff officers and the medical officers who are members of the commission are colonels or lieutenant colonels. In the second place, the provision only applies to officers detached from the branch of the Army in which they are permanently commissioned. By no reasonable construction can it be held that engineer and other staff officers, wherever they may be, are detached from their respective branches of the Army when by order of the Secretary of War and in the service of the United States they are in the full performance of duties peculiarly appropriate to these branches, and especially when they are under the immediate direction and control of a military superior, as the staff officers on the Isthmus are. Service with a staff corps or department does not by any means mean service with troops, or necessarily service with officers or enlisted men of that corps or department. It means nothing more than such service for the United States under the direction of the Secretary of War or other competent military authority as is commonly rendered by officers of the particular corps or departments concerned. It is not apparent that the place of rendition of the service is important.

The author of the veto message was most unfortunate in his reference to the efforts of the present administration "to carry out by Executive action with especial thoroughness" the admittedly wise purpose at which the legislation in question, relative to detached service of officers, is aimed. It was because of the scandalous state of affairs which was recently brought to light in respect to this very matter—and which was due to the inexcusable failure of the present administration to correct it by any kind of Executive action—that it became necessary for Congress to do by legislation what the administration had completely failed to do by Executive action toward correcting this evil.

Under date of January 30, 1912, in response to a resolution of the Senate calling for the information, the Secretary of War transmitted to the Senate a list showing the names and service records of no less than 179 line officers who during the 6 years ended July 31, 1911, had not served 2 years with the organizations in which they were commissioned; also a similar list of 39 line officers who during the 12 years ended July 31, 1911, had not served 4 years in the organizations in which they were commissioned. The response of the Secretary and the two lists which accompanied it were published in Senate Document No. 288, Sixty-second Congress. The publication of this document disclosed a state of affairs which was as discreditable as it was astonishing. The document shows that many officers of long, or relatively long, service had spent less than a half or a third or a fourth of that time with the organizations to which they belonged, having been favored with detached service of various kinds and leaves of absence during the greater part of their entire service. One of the especially favored officers, who had been in service a little over 10 years, had served only 9 months with his regiment.

The worst feature of this showing is to be found in the fact, the responsibility for which lies at the door of the present administration, that of the 179 officers whose names appear on the 6-year list of absentees all but 9 were still absent on the date of compiling the list, to wit, January 1, 1912; and of the 39 officers whose names are borne on the 12-year list all but 1 were still absent January 1, 1912.

Examination of the last issue of the Army List and Directory brings to light the significant fact that, notwithstanding the exposure which was effected by the publication of the Senate document, many officers whose names appear on the lists of absentees published in that document are still absent from their organization, and many whose cases are among the most flagrant of those exposed are actually stationed in Washington at the present time, being immediately under the eyes of the Chief of Staff and the Secretary of War.

Objection is made to lengthening the term of enlistment from three to four years. The ground which is stated as the basis for that objection is that the change "will tend to make difficult or impossible the establishment of a proper reserve" for the Regular Army. The exhaustive investigation made by the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives with regard to this subject, as set forth fully in the report of that committee on the pending Army appropriation bill, established beyond a doubt that the plan advocated by the Chief of Staff and approved by the Secretary of War, attempting to create a reserve from our small Army, is impracticable, enormously expensive, and visionary in the extreme. Moreover, a Senate amendment embodied in the bill which was vetoed provided a practicable and inexpensive way of bringing former soldiers back to the colors when they are needed in time of emergency. This provision, as well as the fact that fixing the Army enlistment period at four years places the Army on the same footing as the Navy and the Marine Corps in this respect, seems to have been overlooked or ignored by the President.

The objection that the provision for a mixed commission of Senators, Representatives, and retired Army officers to consider certain questions relative to Army posts seeks to deprive "the regularly constituted authorities of our military establishment of all voice in the formulation of one of the most important policies now confronting the Nation in the maintenance of its Regular Army," and that "it devolves the leadership in that matter" upon a number of retired officers, has no other foundation than a positive and unqualified misstatement of facts. The creation of an independent and unconstrained commission for no other purpose than to furnish Congress information not colored by the preconceived views of those who have already presented their side of the case very fully to Congress in no wise tends to deprive the regularly constituted authorities of any part of their voice in the matter. The Chief of Staff and the Secretary of War have already, and at great length, communicated their views about this question to Congress, and they will undoubtedly have ample opportunity to be heard with regard to it further and as fully as they may desire before any action is taken by Congress upon the subject. The fact that the Executive objects to an effort on the part of Congress to supplement information and opinions already furnished to it by the War Department by information and opinions to be procured and furnished independently by a commission composed in part of certain distinguished officers whose active military careers have ended and whose futures can not be affected by Executive favor or disfavor suggests very strongly that the real ground for the objection is that the regularly constituted authorities will have no opportunity to shape or color the report of the commission. The assertions that the creation of the commission devolves upon the retired officers who may be members of its leadership in the matter to be investigated and reported upon hardly deserves serious consideration. The War Department has already taken leadership by bringing the question very forcibly to the attention of Congress, and that department or its representatives will have full opportunity in future to exercise its leadership with regard to the question in the same way, or any other way, as it may see fit to adopt. The provision for the commission is merely an attempt on the part of Congress in the exercise of its unquestionable right to obtain information and expert opinions from all sides of a case which is far too important to be disposed of on any one-sided presentation of it, or on information or advice which shall be obtained from a single source.

The objection urged that there will be no saving made by the passage of this bill, and the suggestions made that deficiencies will occur, show to what length the Executive is willing to go in vetoing an appropriation bill. Surely it will not be denied, even by the present President of the United States, that Congress has the sole right to say how much money it will appropriate for the use of the Army, and certainly Congress will not permit itself to be dictated to by the Executive as to the amounts which it shall appropriate.

I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING].

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, the woolen and worsted industry is one of great importance in the State of New Jersey and in the district which I have the honor to represent in this House, and I wish to submit some remarks on Schedule K, in answer to the very able speech made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REDFIELD].

In an address recently delivered on this floor, analyzing and criticizing the report of the Tariff Board on Schedule K, the gentleman from New York [Mr. REDFIELD] once more takes occasion to indulge in a very radical and at the same time most unwarranted and illogical attack upon the woolen and worsted industry of the United States. The gentleman certainly erred in his interpretation of the tariff plank of the last national Republican platform. That plank reads:

> In all tariff legislation the true principle of protection is best maintained by the imposition of such duties as will equal the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, together with a reasonable profit to American industries.

And again:

> * * * the aim and purpose of the Republican policy being not only to preserve, without excessive duties, that security against foreign competition to which American manufacturers, farmers, and producers are entitled, but also to maintain the high standard of living of the wage earners of this country, who are the most direct beneficiaries of the protective system.

It surely can not be seriously maintained that any man with knowledge of business ever supposed or supposes to-day that there was or is one cost of production for all American woolen and worsted mills, or that it would be possible to determine mathematically the exact difference in cost of production between such mills in the United States and in Europe. On the other hand, as every practical man knows, and as manufacturers with experience on both sides of the Atlantic have testified, there is a difference in cost of production between this country and the manufacturing countries of Europe, and the purpose of the American protective tariff is to equalize this difference. If there is any variation in the cost of production, as ascertained by careful inquiry, the protective policy requires that the tariff be fixed at a point which will insure a fighting chance to the American manufacturer.

A good deal has been said by the gentleman about what constitutes the cost of production, and he has dwelt at great length upon the fact that such cost can be decreased by increased output. He has also repeatedly enlarged upon the possibility of increasing output by increasing wages in return for a speeding up of the workpeople. As a matter of fact, these ideas of scientific management are to a great extent theoretical and, at least, have not been tried out to such a degree as to produce any startling results.

Woolen and worsted manufacturers as a whole are heartily in sympathy with the principles of scientific management and would rejoice to see them applied to the fullest possible extent. This question, however, is not germane to the tariff question. Only the most chauvinistic American will assert that America has any monopoly on industrial efficiency. In respect to efficiency and its effect upon productive cost, the European is as favorably situated as the American. Brains and energy are not concentrated in any one spot of earth, and the possibilities of individual initiative open to the citizens of one nation are open to those of another. The cost of production differs not only in America, but also in Europe; efficiency and inefficiency exist side by side not only in the United States, but also on the other side of the Atlantic. Between the nations of Europe, however, and the United States there is a wide, impassable gulf, created by years of unrivaled prosperity; it is the gulf which separates the standard of values in this country from the standard of values abroad. Whether this difference of values will always exist, or whether we shall sink to the cheap level of prices prevalent in Europe, or whether Europe will rise to our level, depends on the wisdom of our statesmen. Of prime importance for us to-day is the fact that there is this difference in values, not only in one industry but throughout the whole commercial structure of the Nation.

If the cost of building and equipping an up-to-date woolen and worsted mill is 50 per cent greater in America than in Europe, it is evident that the fixed charges, even at equal interest rates, must be that much higher; but interest rates generally are also higher in the United States than in Europe. And with plant and machinery costing so much more, the machinery cost, as well as the labor cost, must necessarily be so much greater than in Europe. Everybody knows that the cost of production varies inversely with the output; but this holds true in all countries, and it is mere idle boasting to arrogate to Americans, in those competitive industries which have been similarly developed on both sides of the Atlantic, a possible superiority in efficiency and power of production sufficient to offset the cheaper labor, machinery, and overhead costs of Europe. As a matter of fact, the advantage in this respect lies with the textile industries of Europe, due especially to their greater age and their more settled and better trained body of workers, and also owing to the fact that the industry in European countries has not been the shuttlecock of political parties and initiative has not been paralyzed by threatened changes of commercial policy.

To destroy the values of one industry by throwing open our home market, as respects the products of that industry, to foreign competition, is simply to invite ruin and disaster. And in doing this, to say that it is being done for the benefit of the industry, to make it more efficient, more productive, is the direst confusion of cause and effect. The American woolen and worsted industry must be protected, and every other industry which needs protection must be protected. And the remedy for possible inefficiency does not lie in inviting in the foreign manufacturer to cut the ground from under the feet of American industry, but in putting the industry at home upon such a solid and safe basis as to stimulate and encourage domestic competition. In a previous speech the gentleman from New York ridiculed most unmercifully the antiquated methods of some English manufacturers in his own line of business. Now, England has been a free-trade country for nearly three-quarters of a century, with all the "stimulus" of foreign competition. And yet the inefficiency of the firm he mentioned was almost beyond belief. The gentleman's English friends have undoubtedly a different opinion of the "beneficial" effects of untrammeled foreign competition.

The question of the reclamation or the nonreclamation of waste and the utilization of by-products is purely a matter of profitableness and not an abstract scientific one. In his quotation the gentleman from New York says that, according to Industrial Organic Chemistry, wool grease can be profitably extracted from raw wool as a by-product, of which a value of $3.75 can be produced for 60 cents. A reference to the original work from which he quotes shows that it takes 1 ton of raw wool to yield the quantity of grease mentioned. No details are given regarding the cost of reclamation. It is mere assertion against the practical experience of hundreds of manufacturers. He does not quote the suggestion also made by the author of Modern Industrial Progress in connection with the above statement that most of the wool fat and potash contained in the waste scouring liquid could be saved by establishing degreasing plants at the principal points where wool is shipped. Where are those principal points? How many plants would have to be established? What would be the cost and the fixed charges of such plants? What prospects of continuous employment would they have?

Of interest in this connection are the following remarks from a paper, "The pollution of streams by manufacturing wastes," presented by William S. Johnson at the Congress of Technology in Boston, in April, 1911, upon the occasion of the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the granting of a charter to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology:

> Every manufacturer has some idea of the great value of the material escaping with his wastes, but he is also probably aware that the cost of recovering this material, at least by the present methods, is likely to be greater than the value of the recovered product. Even if it could be recovered at a small profit the trouble and annoyance of carrying on such an industry outside of the regular business of the factory would more than offset any profit.

And again:

> Certain of the most valuable portions of wastes, like the fats from the wool-scouring processes, have been recovered with more or less success where it has been necessary to purify the wastes before they are discharged into the streams, and the results have shown that, while the cost of purifying the wastes is not met by the sale of the product, still the net cost of purification is much less than it would be were these products not recovered. The experience of the wool-scouring mills, however, indicates one great difficulty which is to be met. Several factories having put in wool-scouring plants recently, the market has become overstocked with degras, and the price has consequently been reduced to a very low figure. It is probable that a market can be made for this material, but it can not well be done by the individual manufacturer.

From the experience of manufacturers in Europe and this country it can be stated most positively that the rentability of a plant for reclaiming the by-products mentioned is very doubtful. Even in the case of very large mills the possibility of profit is limited by the varying production; and with smaller mills it is out of the question to install the necessary plant and equipment for the very small amount of by-products which could be reclaimed.

The gentleman from New York mentions one mill which was not visited by the representatives of the Tariff Board, and adds:

> I am told by what I think sound authority that the owners of this mill have said they do not care about a tariff to protect their manufacturing processes, because they are efficient enough to take care of themselves. It is but natural that the name of such a mill should not appear on the visited list, for they might fear to give away the results of their initiative.

While criticizing other mills for not having this wonderful standard of efficiency, he yet intimates that such excellence is something in the nature of a secret, unknown to the average mill owner, and to be jealously guarded by the possessors thereof. It is a bold statement, made, by his own confession, upon hearsay, and no details are given in support of it. Even if the existence of such a mill were admitted and the facts were as he says, the best construction to be put upon the whole matter would be that the conditions of that particular mill are exceptionally favorable, and it therefore can not be taken as a type in determining a fiscal policy. Moreover, the fact that many woolen and worsted mills exist in America with higher efficiency than others, so far from offering ground for criticism of the protective system, is really a strong argument in favor of that system. Efficiency is evidently possible under a protective tariff, and the competition of such mills with less efficient mills can be depended upon to keep prices at a reasonable level and also to stimulate the less efficient mills to greater exertions.

The gentleman from New York speaks with a good deal of derision of the cost accounting common in textile mills. If he had taken the trouble to go carefully and thoroughly into this question, instead of lightly making disparaging assertions about it, he might have become less eloquent, but he certainly would have become much wiser. He is far from making it clear what cost system he would have the textile manufacturer adopt, and without doubt there is a good reason for his silence on this point.

The problem of a practical system of cost accounting in a woolen and worsted mill, which shall actually show the cost of production without imposing an unbearable burden of overhead expense upon the output of the mill, has been and is still being studied by men versed in accounting and the manufacturing processes. The whole science of accurate costing in factories is still a comparatively new science and the practical results accomplished therein, in comparison with the expense, are still far from being final. Smaller mills with a limited output can not always afford the services of experts to install elaborate systems, nor can they afford an expensive staff to maintain such systems. But conditions are not as bad as the gentleman's illustrations would indicate. The examples he gives are amusing, but they are not convincing. On the face of things, a hasty generalization from the few data which have come under his own personal observation, however striking and sensational such generalization, must obviously be erroneous and misleading. A brief glance at the literature of this subject will show that the newer science of cost accounting has made most rapid progress in those factories whose output is confined to a few simple styles where the work can be standardized and simple records are required. In the woolen and worsted industry many factors conspire to complicate the question of cost. Besides the frequent and numerous changes of style made necessary by ever-fluctuating fashions, each manufacturing process is in itself a variable quantity. The amount of sorting necessarily varies with each lot of wool and the purposes for which it is destined. For the finer goods, the fleeces must be most carefully sorted to obtain those qualities of wool which alone can be used in the manufacture of those fabrics.

Hardly any two lots of wool are quite alike, this one requiring more scouring than another, that one more or less carbonizing, and the greatest watchfulness being necessary throughout to see that the process on the one hand is effective enough to thoroughly cleanse the wool and on the other hand that it is not so severe as to injure the wool fiber, which is extremely sensitive to all the various agents which must be employed in its cleansing. In all the subsequent processes of carding, combing, drawing, spinning, weaving, and so forth, the greatest possible attention is necessary, and the process has to be gauged to the peculiarities of the wool or blend of wools that are being worked, necessitating great judgment and vigilance on the part of the operatives and overseers if a perfect product is desired. In the process of finishing, especially, the amount of processing any particular piece of goods is to be subjected to depends on the judgment of the finisher, and many processes have to be repeated two or more times to obtain the desired effect. In other words, the making of fine woolens and worsteds is an industrial art and not a science, and the volume of output must always be subordinate to the requirement of excellence in quality.

In his latest as well as in his previous speeches the gentleman from New York has spoken a good deal about "efficiency," as if it were some panacea for all the ills that flesh is heir to. He seems to measure the woolen and worsted industry by certain standards of efficiency with which he has become familiar in an industry entirely different. The woolen industry, from the sorting of the greasy wool to the last of the numerous finishing processes, is replete with complexity. In this connection it is worth while to quote from another paper presented at the Congress of Technology in Boston in April, 1911.

The gentleman has undoubtedly gained a good deal of information of the subject from the writings of men who are considered authorities in this line, but many of whom are carried away by their enthusiasm into claiming for their system many things which can not be accomplished, at least not at once, without long and persistent and patient effort. The quotation given shows that even in the engineering profession the whole question may be looked at from different points of view. In a paper entitled "A consideration of certain limitations of scientific efficiency," Mr. Henry G. Bradlee said:

During the past year we have become quite familiar with the word "efficiency." It has appeared prominently in the public press, in popular magazines, and in many more serious publications. Recently we have been startled by the statement that our steam-railroad systems are wasting a million dollars a day—$365,000,000 a year—which might be saved through the adoption of so-called scientific methods of management. We do not infrequently see statements like the following, which I quote from a volume recently published by a prominent industrial engineer:

"Inefficiency is not a local evil. It extends through the whole of American life—extends through the whole industrial life of the world.

"The American railroad, by the most advanced engineering and industrial methods, carries an absurdly small net load for an absurdly small distance at an unnecessarily high cost.

"Railroad repair shops throughout the country do not show 50 per cent efficiency, on an average, as regards either materials or labor.

"Coal wastes on railroads are almost as bad as labor and material wastes.

"This inefficiency of effort pervades to a greater or less degree all American activities.

"Inefficiency similar to that in the manufacturing shops exists in all building operations to the same or even greater extent.

"The United States and State agricultural bureaus have determined like inefficiencies in farming operations.

"In our whole educational system there is the same inefficiency. Years are given to study, yet better results have been attained in months."

Why should we be treated to such wholesale condemnation as this? In all modern nations industrial development has claimed the services of the very highest order of intellect and ability. Can it be that the great industrial leaders and workers of the past have all been wrong? Can it be that they have been directing and executing the work of the world with great inefficiency, and is it possible that this inefficiency may be removed by some comparatively simple process? This whole question has recently jumped into prominence because a group of men who have been doing some very excellent and successful work have been tempted into the realm of prophecy and have possibly allowed their enthusiasm to outstrip their judgment.

It would no doubt be presumptuous for one to attempt at this time to place a limit on what may be accomplished in the future through scientific efficiency methods, and certainly no one would wish to criticize or suggest weak points in these methods were it not for the fact that the public may be misled by exaggerated statements and may unreasonably condemn those who are doing most to develop and direct our industries.

In view of the statements which have been made, it certainly seems reasonable and proper for us to consider whether there are not some practical limitations which have prevented a general adoption of these methods in the past, and which may prevent the wholesale overturning of our present industrial system prophesied by certain efficiency engineers.

The entire paper is deserving of a careful perusal, but it will suffice here to quote further the following two paragraphs:

Low cost of operation or of manufacture is, after all, only one factor out of many to be considered in measuring industrial efficiency. It frequently happens that the lowest cost can be secured only through sacrificing other and more important factors. This we have already mentioned in connection with steam-railroad organization. Let us consider some other examples.

A majority of our countrymen believe in a tariff to protect home industries when the cost of manufacture at home is greater than that abroad. They approve the tariff because they believe that there are advantages from diversified business which more than offset any increased price of manufactured goods.

Theoretical or nominal efficiency of machinery and actual efficiency are widely different things. The whole question of efficiency is a relative one, dependent on character of work and the nature of the product. The more the personal supervision of the operator is essential for perfect work and the less automatic the turning out of a perfect product; in other words, the more the personal equation creeps in, the harder it is to attain a nominal standard of efficiency. Especially in the fine woolen and worsted goods manufacture it is most imperative to avoid sacrificing quality to quantity. Many of the finest fabrics absolutely do not permit of speeding up the machinery. As a matter of fact, although some looms with a speed of 130 picks per minute are used in the industry, yet for certain goods special looms built to run at a speed of only 60 picks a minute are employed. Even with the most skilled weavers this moderate speed is necessary to permit of proper supervision and to avoid imperfections, the costliness of which, of course, increases with the fineness of the goods. To try to increase unduly the turnout of the looms would certainly result in proving the truth of the saying, "More haste, less speed."

If the American woolen and worsted industry were the egregious sinner the gentleman from New York makes it out to be, how is it that the American standard of values as a whole is so much higher than in Europe? If the removal of protection from the American woolen and worsted industry is necessary to make that industry more efficient and bring it up to date, what about the many American industries and occupations which, being by nature absolutely or partly protected, do not depend on the tariff for their existence? Are they all inefficient, and what will bring them out of the slough of their inefficiency? Or are they all, in contrast to the woolen and worsted industry, models of efficiency? And how have they attained this degree of efficiency without the stimulus (?) of foreign competition?

A fatal defect in the gentleman's discussion of the entire subject, as it seems to me, is that the whole matter is approached from an absolute and not from an historic point of view. He speaks as if old mills could be torn down and old machinery thrown away without further ado. The woolen and worsted industry, even more than other industries and institutions of America, is an organism representing years of growth—a growth retarded, however, more than once by actual or threatened experimental changes in our commercial policy.

The gentleman from New York evidently takes a keen interest in the tariff question, but in applying experience gained by him in certain lines to an industry with which he is entirely unfamiliar, his zeal seems to lead him astray. His intentions are undoubtedly excellent, but his information regarding the woolen and worsted industry seems to be very meager and fragmentary. In this respect, as in all others, the words of Pope hold true:

A little learning is a dangerous thing.
Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring.

Instead of helping the woolen and worsted industry and the many workers dependent upon it, he injures it and them; and whether he injures it willfully or for lack of knowledge, the harm done is the same. He is undoubtedly a practical man, but many practical men, when they forsake the particular field with which they are familiar, become more theoretical and impractical than the wildest visionary. He says in the peroration of his speech:

We offer an affirmative, not a negative, teaching.

This is most emphatically not so. Despite his plausible arguments and his noble sentiments, the gentleman's teaching, at least as far as the woolen and worsted industry is concerned, is nothing but a destructive and hostile criticism.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I now yield 15 minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, when a similar bill was before the House in the early part of February the minority members of the Committee on Military Affairs at great length expressed their disapproval of the legislative sections contained in the bill. They have had no reason to change their views in that regard.

The President, in his veto message against the former bill, properly says:

The dangers inherent in the practice of attaching substantive legislation to appropriation bills have been frequently pointed out by my predecessors. The only justification that has been offered for such practice is that it has been found a convenient method for facilitating the passage of measures which are deemed expedient by all the branches of government which participate in legislation. Thus, it has more than once occurred that useful items of Army legislation, generally of an urgent character, have been passed in this manner, when the desirability of the enactment was recognized and acquiesced in by the common consent of both the Executive and of Congress. But no condition of urgency is here disclosed, nor can it be claimed that there is any such reason for attaching the present legislation to this Army appropriation bill.

Now, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs stated a moment ago that the President in setting forth his reasons for his veto undertook to usurp the power of Congress. I think that the gentleman [Mr. HAY] rather undertakes to usurp the power of the Executive. The Executive is authorized under the Constitution to place his veto upon any legislation that is objectionable to him.

And whether that legislation be carried in an appropriation bill or in a bill simply covering the legislation to which he objects is immaterial. If the legislation be not approved by the Executive he should veto it, whether it be in a great appropriation bill or whether it be in a separate bill covering the objectionable legislation. This bill which is now before the House carries at least three specific items to which the President objected in his veto message. And the majority of this committee in again reporting this bill with these objectionable legislative features, simply court another veto to the great detriment of the Army and to those men in every section of the country who furnish the articles that make up the subsistence and other supplies of the Army. The President, in his veto message, referring to the former bill, says:

> By reducing the number of the General Staff the bill, in my opinion, tends to cripple the most important corps of the Army—that corps which, though of comparatively recent organization, is performing invaluable work toward the creation of a consistent military policy for the Nation and the organization of an efficient and economical Army. If, as I believe to be the case, this bill would make necessary the reduction of the work of the War College, harm would be done to our military establishment which would be well-nigh incalculable.

Here the President gives a specific reason why he objected to a certain provision of the former bill, and yet this bill which we are asked to vote upon to-day carries an identical provision. It certainly courts another veto and, being general legislation, it should not find a place in this Army appropriation bill.

The President further says:

> By the provisions of the bill which limit the period during which an officer may remain upon detached service or staff duty the organized personnel of many of the most important bureaus and corps of the War Department and military establishment will be disintegrated, and the work now proceeding under them will be seriously impeded. While these provisions aim at a wise purpose and one which my administration has sought to carry out by Executive action with especial thoroughness, the enactments of this bill are deemed too radical and drastic. By removing at once all of the officers of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, except its chief, they would seriously interfere with the work of that most important bureau in administering the affairs of our insular possessions.

Again:

> Earnest protest has been received from the insular government of the Philippines to the effect that so prompt a relief of all of the officers who have had the especial training and experience necessary for these positions would be disastrous to the morale and efficiency of that important body, and would be a serious handicap to the preservation of law and order in the Philippine Islands.
> The provision would at once relieve all but one of the line officers now on duty in the work of constructing the Panama Canal, and, under a very probable construction of the law, it would also relieve the Engineer officers and other staff officers detailed to that work. The organization of the force of officers and men by whom the canal is now being constructed has earned the admiration of the entire Nation. Under this organization that work is fast approaching its completion. The drastic character of the provision can be best understood when it is considered that it might at once relieve from duty the general purchasing officer of the Isthmian Commission, by whom all of the complicated machinery for the locks and gates is being purchased; the officer who is building the Gatun Dam and the spillway; the line officer who, as chief engineer, is relocating the Panama Railroad; the officer in charge of the construction of the new breakwater at Colon; and the medical officer under whose inspection the sanitary work of the zone is being conducted. It would be practically impossible to replace these men or the special knowledge and skill which they have in their departments of the work. The entire organization of the great work in which they are almost indispensable agents would be disintegrated and impaired.
> The fact that a single provision of the bill can cause such serious consequences offers further evidence of the unwisdom of a method which deprives legislation of its usual safeguards of scrutiny and discussion.

Now, to my mind, those are very serious objections to this legislation and yet the bill carries substantially those provisions.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. HAY. What provision in the bill provides for a detail of officers, for example, in the Philippine Constabulary?

Mr. KAHN. I have not it right at my finger's end. If that has been omitted, I do not know of it.

Mr. HAY. There is no provision in the bill which does what the gentleman states.

Mr. KAHN. With regard to the Philippine Constabulary?

Mr. HAY. No; in regard to the Insular Bureau or any of these other details. There was an amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] with regard to the detail of Army officers, but that amendment does not go that far.

Mr. KAHN. As I recollect the amendment, it provided that where an officer has served four years he was to be taken away from his detail, no matter what the work might be that he was engaged upon, or be deprived of his salary.

Mr. HAY. No; it intended to do that, but as a matter of fact it did not do that.

Mr. KAHN. I understood that that was the purpose of the provision.

Mr. HAY. That was the purpose of it; yes.

Mr. KAHN. That was a very objectionable feature. I understand that the same purpose is attempted in the present bill. While I have not examined it carefully, yet——

Mr. HAY. The same amendment is in the present bill, but it does not do what the gentleman says it does.

Mr. KAHN. The President in his message says, as I recall now, that it is capable of such a construction.

Mr. HAY. No. The President says in his message that it is a "very probable construction" that engineer officers may be taken from their detail upon the Panama Canal. But while he may think it a probable construction, nobody else that I have ever heard of who has read the provision thinks so.

Mr. KAHN. Well, the President is looked upon as a very capable lawyer.

Mr. HAY. That is true, but——

Mr. KAHN. And the fact that he says it is capable of a probable construction of that kind would indicate to me, at least, that it is an ambiguous section and has no place in this bill.

Mr. HAY. Who would construe it? The President would, would he not? He would hardly construe it against the interest of the canal.

Mr. KAHN. The department would construe it, and yet another bureau chief coming in might construe it differently.

Mr. HAY. The President will have the final construction of it. But that provision which the gentleman is talking about is not in this bill.

Mr. KAHN. Where is the provision to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] will permit, I may say that the President does not confine his observation with regard to the probable construction to engineer officers. He says, "And other staff officers."

Mr. CANNON. Does this bill change it so that it is different from the other bill, so as to meet the objections of the President?

Mr. KAHN. No; I do not think it does.

Mr. CANNON. Why not?

Mr. KAHN. Because the majority of the committee have reported this bill out just as it was in the other House bill, and the President says that it is capable of that construction—the construction that he refers to in his message.

Mr. TILSON. So far as that matter is concerned, the present bill contains exactly the language that was in the bill which the President vetoed.

Mr. KAHN. Yes. I will ask my colleague from Virginia [Mr. HAY] to let me have the page as soon as he finds it.

The President in his message also referred to the increase of the time of the term of enlistment. When the vetoed bill was up in the House last February it was shown by figures that a five-year enlistment period resulted in increased desertions. Since the bill passed this House I have had letters from enlisted men, in which they have told me that a three-year enlistment period was a proper period and that the five-year enlistment period was entirely undesirable.

In my own mind I think that a short period of enlistment is the best. A one-year enlistment, in my judgment, would be better than a three-year period of enlistment. Many men enlist, young men, probably 20 or 21 years of age, without any experience in life. They are ambitious; they are patriotic; they see a possibility of advancement in the Army, and they enlist. Within a few months after they have signed the articles of enlistment it frequently happens they find that they are entirely unsuited for the service, and they want to get out. In cases of that kind the enlisted man should be given his discharge at the end of one year.

Mr. HAY. I have that provision now. It is on page 6, line 21. It provides:

> That no money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any officer for any period during which he shall have been detached for any duty of any kind for more than four of the preceding six years from the organization in which he is commissioned, unless such continuous detachment from such organization for more than four years shall have been specifically authorized by law.

Mr. KAHN. I thank my colleague for having cited the language. That is the language that was in the other bill?

Mr. HAY. No; that is not the language at all that was in the bill that was vetoed.

Mr. KAHN. Then why is it here? That was the language of the bill as it passed the House. Was it not the same language that was agreed to by the conferees?

Mr. HAY. Not at all. The Senate amended the House provision, and that, as amended, went to the conferees, and they wrote an entirely new section upon this particular subject, providing that no officer below the rank of lieutenant colonel shall be detached, and so forth.

Mr. KAHN. That was said to refer to Lieut. Col. Wilson, the subsistence officer on the Canal Zone.

Mr. HAY. It did not affect him at all, because it would apply only to those below that rank.

Mr. KAHN. The lieutenant-colonel proviso was put in in order to save one man.

Mr. HAY. Not at all. This provision does not at all do what the President is opposed to. That is the point I make.

Mr. KAHN. This language, however, does prevent a man from continuing in the work to which he has become accustomed by at least four years' service.

Mr. HAY. But is not that right? I ask the gentleman from California——

Mr. KAHN. I do not think it is right. There are many cases when a man by his experience becomes especially adapted to a certain line of work, and to take him away and break in a new man who knows nothing about it at all is, in my opinion, exceedingly injurious.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. In a moment; and gentlemen here in Congress constantly speak of the fact that long service here is a beneficial thing to their constituents.

Mr. HAY. That is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. KAHN. It is not a different proposition at all. Men after long experience in a certain position can perform their duties in a manner beneficial and advantageous to the country, while a new man would probably know nothing about those duties and would require some time in acquiring the necessary information and training to properly perform those duties. There would probably be delay, there would possibly be additional expense, and new methods would likely be tried out that might prove exceedingly disastrous to the public service.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. HAY. Is the gentleman in favor of the detail system in the Army?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. HAY. Let us take, for example, the Insular Bureau, to which the President referred.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. HAY. There are detailed in that bureau only two Army officers.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. HAY. One is a major and the other is a captain. The captain has been there for a little over a year.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. HAY. Does the gentleman say that that bureau would be affected in a detrimental manner by the detail of some other captain to that service? Does not the gentleman know that that officer has been away from the organization to which he belongs in the General Staff on other detached duty for eight or nine years, and does the gentleman think that is right?

Mr. KAHN. I understand that that officer has been away, but the major in that bureau, who by virtue of his position there has the rank of colonel——

Mr. HAY. But I am asking the gentleman now about the captain.

Mr. KAHN. That captain is learning his duties there, and so long as the superior officer over him continues in his place the latter can always regulate the work of that office.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. KAHN. I thank the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HAY. Then the argument of the gentleman goes to the abolition of the detail system, because, if he is correct, when a man is detailed to a position in any one of these corps and he learns the duties there he ought not to be disturbed.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, there are some places in the Army where a man can be taken from his detail without any loss to the service. There are other places, such as are enumerated by the President in his veto message, where it would be a great loss to the Government to take a man away from his detail.

Mr. HAY. The President enumerated the Philippine Constabulary, for example.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. HAY. All of the officers who are now on duty with the Philippine Constabulary have been there for 4 years, some of them 8, some 9, and one as many as 10 years. Does the gentleman think that these men ought to be kept there and no other officers detailed to that work? What is the idea of the detail system? The idea is that the officers of the Army should be detailed for these several services in order that the whole Army may be educated. That was the argument used to inaugurate the detail system, and the duties that are to be performed in the Philippine Constabulary are not very difficult. Some other officers ought to be sent there. Some officer might die, and then, according to the argument made by the gentleman and the President, the whole service will be thrown into confusion.

Mr. KAHN. Not at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired. He has consumed 15 minutes which have been charged to the gentleman from Illinois and 5 minutes which have been charged to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I again yield to the gentleman another 5 minutes.

Mr. KAHN. I again thank the gentleman from Virginia. In the Philippine Constabulary, and in other branches of the Government service, there are officers who have become thoroughly familiar with the duties of the particular work in which they are engaged. I think it is ill-advised under such conditions to take the officers away from that kind of work; but there are many places to which officers are detailed—for instance, to colleges as military instructors—where, after four years of service, a man can be detached without any detriment to anybody. A comparison of the provision in this bill with the provision in the vetoed bill indicates to me, at any rate, that the present provision is even more drastic than the provision referred to in the President's veto, and, if anything, is more objectionable.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is one provision of the bill in particular to which I desire to call the attention of the House, aside from the legislative features of the bill, and that is the item making appropriation for the subsistence department of the Army. In my judgment, the amount appropriated in this bill is entirely inadequate. The appropriation for the subsistence of the Army last year was $9,033,579.40. The estimates for this year were $8,988,867.42. This bill carries for subsistence $8,605,273. The Commissary General of the Army, in explaining the difference in the estimates, stated that the amount asked for last year was predicated upon the full strength of the Army, namely, 80,000 men; and this year his estimates were for only 75,000 men, or 5,000 less than the full strength.

Yet the committee has materially reduced the amount estimated by the Commissary General. What happened to the appropriation of last year? The department recently sent to the Committee on Appropriations a deficiency item of nearly $600,000 for the purchase of commissary supplies for the Army. If this bill goes through in its present shape I believe that the deficit will be nearer $1,000,000 than $600,000. There is entirely too great a decrease in the appropriation carried in this bill for that purpose.

What has happened as a result of the cheeseparing process of the committee? Merchants all over the United States who have furnished supplies to the Army can not get their money. I have received telegrams from the merchants of the Pacific coast telling me that they had to go to the banks to borrow money in order to keep themselves afloat, paying interest upon their loans. The Government of the United States does not pay a dollar of interest to any man who has to wait for his money from the Government. One man sent me a telegram recently saying that he had not had a dollar for 60 days, that the appropriation was exhausted, and yet he was compelled to live up to the letter of his contract in furnishing supplies or suffer a penalty. He is compelled to borrow from his bankers, although the Government owes him a large sum of money. I have here a telegram from San Francisco in regard to this matter, which reads as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., June 24, 1912.

Hon. JULIUS KAHN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We, in company with other merchants, have sold and delivered goods to the War Department of the United States, and for the past 60 days have not received payment for same. We entered into this obligation with the United States Government, relying upon being paid for our deliveries within a reasonable time. We are informed that the War Department can not make payment owing to a want of funds. We understand that a deficiency appropriation bill, to provide the funds to meet these obligations of the Government, is now before Congress, and we would request the assistance of the California delegation in obtaining the passage before the 1st of July of the necessary bill. Please communicate with the congressional delegation.

The firms who sign that telegram are gentlemen who furnish supplies to the Government. They are reputable business men who stand high in the community in which they live. They ought not to be compelled to wait so long for money that is justly due them. This cheeseparing policy will result in additional expense to the Army. When business men find that they can not receive their pay as their bills fall due they may be tempted, when bidding on Government contracts in the future, to raise the price of their commodities in order to offset the interest they have to pay to the banks that loan them money to tide over their financial difficulties by reason of the Government's nonpayment of its just debts. It is not good business to compel the contractors to wait 60 days for their pay after they have furnished the materials required by the Government. No private concern would dare to treat its creditors that way. And the Government ought in all such matters to set the example for the private citizen. There are many other defects in the pending bill which my limited time will not permit me to point out. I am opposed to the measure in its present shape and hope it will be voted down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY].

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, when the conference report on the military appropriation bill was before the House, I voted for its adoption. I did so because I was convinced that the bill carried a great deal of valuable legislation in it for the Army. I did not approve of all of it. There were some things in the bill that I would not have voted for if a separate vote could have been had on each proposition. For instance, I did not approve of lengthening the term of enlistment for the soldiers in the Army, and I would not have voted for any provision which would have imposed an excessive limitation upon the requirements for service of an officer as Chief of Staff. But I did find in the bill as it came from the conference legislation which I considered of vital importance to the Army. I am sorry to be compelled to take exception to the statements just made by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] in reference to the desirability of continuing indefinitely on special duties officers of the line of the Army who have been assigned to detached service. I think that one of the greatest evils in the Army to-day comes from the fact that there are hundreds of officers detached on special duty away from their companies and their regiments. Before the Military Committee there have come time and time again the Secretaries of War, the Chiefs of Staff, and even the President of the United States, when he was Secretary of War, calling our attention to this crying evil, and recommending legislation which would cut off these continual and perpetual details, and asking for legislation which would send those men back to their regiments.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly.

Mr. PRINCE. Has the gentleman read the veto message by the President, on page 4, where he used this expression:

> While these provisions aim at a wise purpose and one which my administration has sought to carry out by Executive action with especial thoroughness the enactments of this bill are deemed too radical and drastic.

So you and the President are in accord that these provisions are too radical and drastic, and for that reason he vetoed it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I believe the President wrote that statement without an accurate impression of what the bill would do. I contend that if there are officers of the line doing duty as commissary officers down on the Isthmus of Panama who would be taken away from that duty on the canal and were returned to their regiments, that there are hundreds of just as capable officers in the line of the Army to-day who could be assigned to that duty, and very glad to have it, and the work would not suffer one iota. I contend there is no subordinate officer on detached duty to-day in the Army but who could be replaced by hundreds of equally competent officers, and I contend that it would vastly increase the morale of the Army to send these men who have so long enjoyed the special privilege of detached service away from the line of the Army back to their regiments and detail other officers in their places, and it is for that reason I hope that this really good legislative feature will be retained in the bill when it is finally enacted.

In the original bill and in the present bill under consideration I think unwise, and I am opposed to, the provision for the extension of the enlistment period; likewise the provision eliminating cadet service in computing length of service, and also the reduction of the Cavalry arm.

I heartily approve the provisions of the bill for the establishment of a quartermaster corps by the consolidation of the present Quartermaster, Commissary, and Pay Departments; also the establishment of a service corps of enlisted men, provided such corps shall be gradually created so as not to interfere with the tenure of office of any of the present teamsters, bakers, firemen, storekeepers, and laborers now employed throughout the Army, and that only vacancies be filled by service-corps men, and no person now under civil-service regulations be affected. I also indorse the idea of requiring a proper length of previous service with the line of the Army as a requisite to appointment to most of the places on the General Staff.

The need of some legislation concerning the absence of officers from their regiments has been apparent for several years. The Army regulations cover the subject, but little or no attention has been paid to the flagrant violations of the regulation, which had become practically a dead letter. Information called for by Congress developed a condition demanding drastic remedy. The legislation proposed is objected to mainly by those who have profited by failure to apply the regulations, and who under any fair system would have been long since returned to duty with their organizations. The legislation conforms to the principle commended by the President, of rotation in staff and other details. The Army is filled with capable officers and there will be no difficulty in finding substitutes for those who may be relieved under the new legislation, which is nothing more than an enactment of an Army regulation into a statute. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield back those two minutes.

Mr. HAY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR.]

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Speaker, as I view this bill it is entirely different from the bill that has been vetoed by the President. I think gentlemen are confusing it somewhat. The first ground of veto offered by the President is the provision limiting the eligibility of officers of the staff. That provision is not in this bill.

Mr. KAHN. Nobody contends that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not at all. Now, take the next one. To reduce the number of the General Staff, that provison is not in this bill——

Mr. KAHN. Oh, yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not exactly as it is here. It is a different measure which the President vetoed in that regard. Now, take the third provision——

Mr. KAHN. This reduces the General Staff.

Mr. McKELLAR. If gentlemen on the other side will examine page 6 of the bill that was vetoed, as shown here on this memorandum, and then examine this page 6 of the bill now under consideration, they will see that is an entirely different provision in the bill now proposed, wholly different in all respects from the bill that the President vetoed.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman in what respect is that difference in the gentleman's mind?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will suggest this, that the President objects to it because it is too drastic. Now, if the gentleman will just read, on page 9 of the veto message of the President, he will see the drastic measure to which the President objected. If he reads on page 6 of the bill under consideration, he will see that it contains no such drastic features as the President points out.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman has stated that the present bill does not reduce the number of officers in the General Staff.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I did not; I said not in the same way in which the bill which was vetoed reduced it.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman will admit that this bill reduces the number of officers of the General Staff very materially.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. PRINCE. I think the gentleman tried to get at this question very fairly, but let me call his attention to page 9 to the proviso to which the gentleman referred.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of what?

Mr. PRINCE. Of the veto message of the President:

> Provided, That hereafter in time of peace whenever any officer holding a permanent commission with rank below that of lieutenant colonel shall not have been actually present for at least two years—

Then he shall receive no pay. That is the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is not in this bill.

Mr. PRINCE. Now, look on page 6 of the bill, line 21:

> No money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any officer for any period during which he shall have been detached for any duty of any kind for more than four of the preceding six years from the organization in which he is commissioned.

No officer, even a major general. The other was a lieutenant colonel. The provision now in the bill is even broader than the one vetoed and more drastic. It goes on to say—

Unless such continuous detachment from such organization for more than four years shall have been specifically authorized by law.

So that the whole includes the part. He vetoes a part, and yet you say the whole is not as great as the part.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the gentleman is mistaken in that entirely.

Mr. PRINCE. If the gentleman will read that proviso he will see I am not.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is not nearly as drastic; but, of course, that is a difference of opinion.

Mr. PRINCE. All right.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the gentleman is mistaken. Now, we come to the next provision of the President's veto message, which is in regard to the term of enlistment. Now, of course, the President suggests that as a reason why he vetoed this bill. I do not believe he would have vetoed it if that was the only reason. It is very natural he should take that position, but the difference of opinion is this: This House has passed before the five-year term of enlistment and it has proposed to pass in this bill a five-year term of enlistment, and, as I say, that is just a difference of opinion for which, I am sure, the President would not veto this bill. The next provision constitutes the commission; that is not in the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAY. I yield the gentleman two minutes additional.

Mr. McKELLAR. The next provision is purely a difference of opinion about the expenditures that may be required under this bill. It is a different bill from the bill that was vetoed, and I do not think that the President would urge that as a reason why he should veto this bill. And now it seems to me that the features of this bill to which the President really objected, which we all know, are Nos. 1 and 2, as the President has pointed out. Those are the reasons, as we all believe, why the President vetoed the bill. Those provisions are not in this bill, and I see no reason why we should not reenact the measure as passed by the House before, and I hope the bill will pass. [Applause.]

Mr. PRINCE. I now yield five minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON].

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, the present bill is the same as that which passed this House on February 16, 1912. That bill went its way to the Senate, where it was amended, then through a prolonged conference between the two Houses, where it was further amended, and finally to the President, where, on June 17, 1912, it met the well-deserved fate of a veto. The reasoning of the presidential veto is so conclusive that no attempt has been made to meet it. Instead, we are confronted with a new bill, which is, in fact, the old bill with the Senate and conference amendments eliminated. While some of the objectionable features referred to in the veto message have been removed, others, left out of the House bill by the Senate and the conference, have been restored.

When the former bill was under discussion here the matter of extending the enlistment period from three years to five years was gone into in much detail and, in my opinion, the arguments then made against the extension have not been and can not be answered. I shall not attempt to repeat the arguments made on that occasion and shall refer to only one of them in order to enlarge somewhat upon it.

The adoption of the five-year enlistment period would be, in my opinion, a very serious step backward and directly opposed to the best military thought of the present day. The tendency under such a policy would be toward a professional army. A professional army as small as ours in a country as large as ours is an absurdity. A war of any consequence must be fought, as have been our wars in the past, by men brought into the service at the time for the particular purpose. When all arms were of short range and men could fight in compact bodies it was a less difficult matter to train men for efficient military service. It was a comparatively simple matter to fill the ranks of skeleton companies with raw recruits and trust to the impetus of the trained men to carry the entire mass forward in case of conflict. With the rapid development in firearms has come new and more difficult problems in warfare. The heavy column has been necessarily replaced by the thin skirmish line. Instead of going forward with locked arms or in solid phalanx, it often becomes necessary to advance only a few men at a time, or even individual soldiers. This means that each man must be trained. If skeleton organizations are filled up with raw recruits the trained men will be impeded or demoralized by the failure of the untrained.

Our Army as it exists to-day is little more than a school of training for the national defense in case of war. The training required of officers makes it necessary that they be professional soldiers, and they become essentially military teachers. With the man in the ranks it is quite different. It is generally agreed that a private soldier can be well trained within a year, and that any time beyond three years is wasted, so far as necessary training is concerned.

There are two widely differing theories as to how best to maintain our Army in time of peace that it may most effectively perform its function in time of war. The one upon which this provision in the bill seems to be based is that it is better to train only a few men and keep these in the service as long as possible. There would be a sounder foundation for this theory if our Army were large enough of itself to need no assistance in case of war. The other theory—and, as I believe, the only sound one—is that inasmuch as it will surely be necessary to draw from civil life the bulk of our soldiery in case of war it is extremely important that there be as many trained men as possible in civil life. The supply of such trained men will grow less as the period of enlistment is increased. If the period of enlistment were only sufficient for thorough training and no more, the number of such men would rapidly increase. The President, in his veto message, referring to the extended term of enlistment, well says:

It will tend to make difficult or impossible the establishment of a proper reserve by which the Regular Army could in time of emergency be brought up to its full strength.

Several weeks ago, while the former bill was still in the Senate or in conference, I introduced a bill providing for just such a reserve as that referred to by the President. It is now pending before the Committee on Military Affairs, and I shall continue to press it before that committee as one of the most important propositions touching our national defense.

We have all become familiar with the word "conservation" as applied to our natural resources, but little has been said touching conservation of our military resources. For a long time it has seemed to me that we have failed to take full advantage of one of our chief military resources so as to be able to use it in case of war. Each year a considerable number of men, well trained for service, go out of the Army and return to civil life. My bill proposes to make of these men a national military reserve. I can not go into the details of that bill here, though I commend it to the thoughtful consideration of those who are interested in the question of a proper and reasonable national defense.

It is enough to say here that the principle involved is to conserve our resources in trained men. Having at great expense trained men in our Army and in our militia, instead of turning them loose without keeping any record of them as to where they can be found in case of emergency I propose to make a reserve, which substantially means that all organizations in the Army and in the militia will be potentially filled to the maximum war strength with trained men, ready in case of trouble to step into the ranks of their organizations, instead of having our skeleton regiments filled up with raw recruits.

One additional feature I would add is that if this reserve can be brought about as provided in the bill to which I have referred, it can be done with comparatively little cost. I am prepared to show, from figures which I believe to be reliable, that a reserve sufficient to fill every organization in the Army to its maximum war strength can be established and maintained for less than it would cost to maintain two regiments of Infantry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, there are many objectionable provisions in this bill, and if the opportunity for amendment had been given I should have offered or voted for quite a number of amendments. I am not in favor of the change in the terms of enlistment. I think it is a very great mistake to increase that term. I am not in favor of the reduction of the strength of the Cavalry arm, and particularly at this time. If I had the opportunity, I should offer amendments striking out certain provisions in the bill, found on pages 31, 33, and 37, which prohibit the use of appropriations made for barracks and quarters, and for roads, walks, wharves, and drainage, and for water and sewer systems at certain Army posts. This bill, Mr. Speaker, illustrates, by its violation of it, the wisdom of the general rule against legislation on appropriation bills. Our rules for a great many years have prohibited general legislation on such bills. That rule is modified to a certain extent in the present rules by the so-called Holman rule, under which a certain very wide class of amendments can be made which contain legislation. In my opinion it is very unwise to give the appropriations committees of the House any authority under any pretense to place legislation on appropriation bills. The members of those committees should be required, as the members of the other committees are, to bring their proposals of legislation before the House in a regular way, to present them for consideration, to have them considered in an orderly way, and on their merits, and without regard to items that may be carried on an appropriation bill. So long as the committees are allowed to legislate, so long we shall have and ought to have presidential vetoes of appropriation bills. The appropriation committees of this House have arrogated to themselves powers that can not be exercised by other committees of the House. By reason of their control over appropriations they have brought in appropriation bill after appropriation bill containing all sorts and kinds of legislative matter. Many of the propositions, if standing alone and on their own merits, would not and could not receive the support of the House. That being the case, these committees should not be given the opportunity to secure indirectly what they could not secure by direct legislative action.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN].

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, there is a provision in the latter part of the bill, starting on page 63, at the bottom of that page, to the effect that hereafter the service of a cadet at the United States Military Academy, or as a naval cadet or midshipman, shall not be counted in computing for any purpose the length of service of any officer of the Army. I understand this method of computing time has been practiced for some 30 years or more.

Now, as an employer of labor to some extent I have always considered that good treatment and good pay secure good men. I can not understand what purpose the committee had in view in practically cutting down the pay of the cadet officers to the extent of about 10 per cent. Certainly the cost of living is increasing, and wages are or should be increased proportionately. There is a great demand for the sort of talent that the United States needs in its Army and Navy, and there is great difficulty to-day in getting the sort of men at Annapolis and at West Point that the United Sates Government needs.

I suggested to some bright young men in my district that they ought to offer themselves as candidates for West Point and Annapolis. Their answer was that they did not care anything for those positions; they would rather go to work and earn money sufficient to put themselves through college on their own responsibility and have their services belong to themselves. They did not care to go there and put themselves under the authority which they are obliged to encounter and do the work which they are called upon to do for the pay that they get. And in talking over this matter with officers at West Point and Annapolis I am advised by them that a great many of the men who have acquired the education leave the Government service as soon as possible, because they are offered better pay in civil life.

It is true that after entering the Military Academy the cadet receives his education and training at the expense of the Government, but his appointment to the grade of second lieutenant is made contingent on his ability to pass satisfactorily through the difficult course outlined in the Official Register of Officers and Cadets of the Military Academy.

If civilians were required to pass an examination even remotely approximating the requirements of the curriculum of West Point there would be justice in the assertion that Congress, not the War Department, had discriminated in favor of graduates of the academy, but the cadet before entering West Point acquires at his own expense practically the same education which the civilian acquires at his own expense. The Government pays for the education of the cadet, not with a view to benefiting him but with a view to benefiting the State; the civilian is not required to qualify in the curriculum of the academy. On this score there is no discrimination against the civilian.

Upon entering the military service neither the civilian nor the cadet is required to demonstrate fitness for the military profession. While the cadet is receiving training in the rudiments of his profession his pay is $709.50 per year; while the civilian is receiving training in the rudiments of his profession as a second lieutenant his pay is $1,700 per year. On this score again there is no discrimination against the civilian.

The average age of the cadet upon entering the Military Academy is 19 years; the average age upon graduation, 23 years. If unsuccessful in securing an appointment to enter West Point, the civilian may enlist at the age of 18, and at the age of 20 may receive his appointment as second lieutenant by passing an examination equivalent to that required for first-year men at West Point, or equivalent to that required for civilians in entering the Army. As a soldier he would receive the pay and allowances of his grade. He can reach the grade of second lieutenant three years earlier than the average cadet; service as an enlisted man under the act of June 18, 1878, is counted in computing his service for longevity pay and retirement, while the advantage of seniority in attaining the grade of second lieutenant ahead of older men in the Corps of Cadets will remain with him during the rest of his career, will permit him to attain promotion in the higher grades three years ahead of graduates of the Military Academy, and will place him in command of them whenever they serve together. Should he fail in his examination at West Point he may secure his appointment as second lieutenant either by taking the examination as a civilian or by enlisting and passing through the ranks, and in the latter case his time spent in the ranks will be counted in computing his service for longevity pay and for retirement.

On the whole, it would therefore seem that no real advantage is enjoyed by the cadet under existing law, and that if the privilege now accorded him by statute be taken away he will be at a serious disadvantage as compared to civilians and enlisted men. If this be done the time spent in a rigorous course of training at the Military Academy will become a handicap which the Government ought not to impose.

The proposed legislation withdraws the privilege of counting cadet service for retirement as well as for pay. Officers of long service regard the retirement privilege as a valuable one, and while advantage is not often taken of the laws permitting retirement before reaching the age at which it is compulsory, there is and will be a natural feeling of sorrow upon the part of such officers that, as they approach the end of their careers in the service, it should be considered proper to curtail the privilege of honorable retirement under the expectation of which they have given long service to the Government. Enlisted men can claim retirement after 30 years' service, and can then receive three-quarters of their allowances as well as three-quarters of their pay. Officers can claim the right of retirement only after 40 years' service, and then receive three-quarters of their pay only, losing all of their allowances. The privilege of counting cadet service with respect to retirement does not therefore seem to be out of accord with other similar privileges which are granted by law.

Midshipmen at the Naval Academy are at all times subject to orders into general service, and they have actually been so employed, as when, during the Civil War, midshipmen were ordered to cruising vessels after only two or three years' training instead of undergoing full course of four years. During the Spanish War midshipmen of all classes were ordered to active duty, some of them even doing duty as regular watch officers on board the smaller vessels. Again, for several years after 1902 midshipmen were ordered to sea before the completion of their academic term to help meet the requirements of the active service.

Further, during the course at the Naval Academy the midshipmen spend one-quarter of each year at sea in vessels in active service in the fleet. During this time they perform actual responsible duty, which if not done by them would have to be performed by other officers.

Their four years as midshipmen is therefore not a purely educational period, but part educational, part active service. Further, as they are subject to whatever duty may be assigned to them, without any choice of their own, from the moment of entering the naval service, they should be credited with service for longevity pay and purposes of retirement from the same date.

As regards retirement, if the 4 years' service as midshipmen were to be neglected the purpose of the 30, 40, and 45 years' retirement laws would be defeated, the aim of those laws being to secure younger officers for the arduous duties in the several higher grades. To raise all these ages 4 years would nullify the progress made in the past 10 years in the desired direction, unless the laws mentioned were correspondingly modified.

Enlisted men's service counts for all benefits from the day of enlistment, yet their unproductive period of preliminary training is comparatively longer than a midshipman's, and continues for some months after their drafting into regular service. After only 8 months' service midshipmen regularly go to sea and perform responsible duty; they are at any time available for such duty throughout their 4 years as midshipmen, and thereafter for 40 years or more, whereas the enlisted man is seldom capable of regular service under 6 months and generally not for a year, or one-quarter of his whole term.

In general, in seafaring life, and particularly in the naval profession, instruction and service go hand in hand, so that to regard the midshipmen's 4 years as purely educational would be as far from correct as to consider the ensign's 3 years or the lieutenant's 8 years as purely practical. The proportions of study, instruction, and responsible duty vary too widely to make an arbitrary ruling without injustice, not to individuals, but to the whole grade of officers concerned.

The Government of the United States has secured good men in the past, but I candidly believe it can not secure men of like character in the future unless it gives as much or more for the service than it has paid in the past. I can not believe this provision will be an advantage to the service, and I trust it will be defeated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOWMAN. I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman will be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 31 minutes remaining.

Mr. PRINCE. I do not wish to dispute with the Chair, but only the gentleman from California has used 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] had 5 minutes yielded him, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] had 5 minutes, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING] 1 minute, the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] 15 minutes, and 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN].

Mr. PRINCE. I now yield, Mr. Speaker, five minutes to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the objections to the provisions of this bill were quite completely expressed by my colleague, Mr. PRINCE, and other members of the Committee on Military Affairs when the other Army appropriation bill was before the House. The provisions which were in the conference report that were especially objectionable, and which were discussed when the conference report was before the House, are not in this bill. We all understand, those of us who are here, that the passage of this bill in this form at this time is mainly perfunctory. The other bill having been passed by this House, and the conference report upon it having been agreed to, and it having been sent to the President, the President vetoed it.

There was then only one of two things which could be done—either to bring the vetoed bill before the House for a final vote or to introduce a new bill practically in the form in which it passed the House before. If the vetoed bill had been brought before the House, I think the veto would have been sustained; that is, I do not think there would have been a two-thirds vote in either body in favor of the bill.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] has now put before the House the bill with a new number, the same as it passed the House before. It was quite fully discussed in the House before, at the time of its consideration previously, and I take it that the object is now to have this bill go into conference again and to endeavor there to meet the objections which the President raised by his veto.

I hope that the gentlemen in charge of the House will understand that the President is quite within his rights and privileges in vetoing an appropriation bill because he objects to the legislation upon it. No legislative body at this day, in my judgment, can afford to withhold appropriations because of a difference of opinion concerning general legislation; that is, appropriations for the maintenance of the Government—in this case for the support of the Army. I hope that the conferees will be able, when they bring a final report before the House, to present a conference report which can meet the approval of both sides of the House and meet the approval of the President when the bill is sent to him.

It is not a case for stubbornness on either side. There will have to be some yielding, probably, by all the parties in controversy. But on this side of the House, although we would like to express our disapproval of the provisions of the bill by a roll call, I take it that my colleague in charge of the bill on this side will consider the peculiar conditions under which we are operating and express the disapproval of this side of the House in the statement which he makes on the floor, and that the President and others throughout the country who are interested in this legislation will understand that the failure to demand a roll call on the bill, or possibly even the failure to demand tellers or a division, if that should not be done, will not be because we are in favor of the bill, but because we are not in favor of stopping legislation on account of the absence of so many gentlemen at Baltimore. We are quite willing on this side of the House to exchange the ordinary amenities of civilized warfare with the gentlemen on that side of the House, without attempting to prevent them from transacting business or attempting to override them because they are temporarily in a minority.

Mr. GARNER. We have had enough war in the last two weeks without bringing any in here. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Well, if I should read the last report we had from Baltimore it would seem so. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is recognized for five minutes.

[Mr. CANNON addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in line with the suggestions just made by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] I believe the President of the United States, if he was ever justified in vetoing an appropriation bill, exercised that power with wisdom and in strict line with his duty on this occasion. So far as the bill as it originally passed the House is concerned, it may be well for us to stop for a moment and see what this method of legislation means and what the provisions the bill contained mean.

Here was to be presented to the President an appropriation bill which reduced the Army by five regiments of Cavalry; which changed the existing term of the soldiers' enlistment; which altered the amounts of pay and conditions of allowances made to officers and enlisted men; which consolidated the three great supply corps of the Army; and which also merged The Adjutant General's and Inspector General's Departments with the General Staff, making changes which necessarily had a far-reaching effect upon the military policy of the Nation. Where are those provisions found? They are found in a bill containing appropriations aggregating nearly $100,000,000, necessary to keep the military establishment of this Government in operation; and yet you place before not only the President of the United States but the Commander in Chief of that Army in the last days of a legislative session the alternative of acceding to these vicious and unwise provisions or of striking down the entire appropriation. I say that that is not in keeping with the high standard of public service which should mark the performance of duty by this House.

There is another provision that I do not believe should go back to conference or sent to the Senate, and that is the provision, originally contained in the bill, and which is in the one under present consideration, striking down the pay of the men in the foreign service, the men who in good faith made a contract with the United States Government, who donned its uniform, and sailed across the seas, who are to-day 10,000 miles away from home, and helpless to aid themselves against the imposition of this wrong, while we on the floor of this House undertake to abrogate the contract, strike down the little pay we guaranteed them, and make, I believe, as unjust an attack upon them in their absence as was ever made upon men serving in the military ranks of any nation. [Applause.]

An American soldier should never be shot in the back, but if he is, the last body to do it should be the Congress of the United States.

His pay at best is not large, and the average extra pay for the foreign service is by no means commensurate with the additional expense and vicissitudes. He enters the service for a given number of years with at least an implied promise of certain compensation. If he breaks that pact he is branded a "deserter" and suffers consequently. While the brand of infamy attaches to the soldier's violation of the contract, to say the least its violation by a powerful and wealthy Government is by no means creditable. If the foreign pay is to be reduced, reduce it at the end of the enlistment periods of those now in the military service.

In addition to this there is another suggestion I wish to make in passing, with reference to this particular bill, which went to the President and was finally vetoed. There was substantive legislation added in conference. I am just as jealous as any man in this House of the respective rights of the two branches of the legislative department as I am of the rights of conferees appointed by them, but I do not believe that any set of men outside of this body and the Senate has the right to set up, as a result of their superior confidence in themselves, a third or additional legislative branch of the Government. I do not believe that any committee on conference ever had the right to initiate original legislation of this kind, tack it onto appropriation bills, and send it to the President with, as I said before, the alternative of acceding to their demands or striking down a great appropriation bill in the last hours of a legislative session.

If it were not for the Baltimore convention and other conditions that have existed in this country for the last three or four weeks, it is more than probable that this Congress would now be adjourning and we would find ourselves as a consequence of this unwise policy which I have outlined face to face with a prolonged summer session engaged in a controversy over this bill, with the additional peril of having the military establishment crippled, or, on the other hand, acceding to the unwise provisions that have been inserted in the Army bill by those who had no authority whatever to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the provisions outlined by the President as being obnoxious should be stricken out now in so far is this House can, in its wisdom, see its way clear to do so, and I do not believe that we ought again to send either to the Senate or to a conference committee a measure of this kind and impose upon them the duty of doing that which we, in our wisdom, ought to do here and now.

No other body should be regarded by this House as possessing superior legislative ability. No measure should leave this House in a condition which we will admit will require changing for the better. It certainly is no credit to the House to be compelled to recede from any position it takes in initiating legislation. Nothing so impairs the influence of this body or increases that of another so much as forcing us to yield to views in conflict with those which we have gone so far as to frame and pass in the form of original House bills. The high standing of this body will best be preserved always by pursuing that patient, cautious course which defies being departed from, and the expression, "It will be cured elsewhere," will disappear from the parlance of the House.

Passing bills which are certain to be vetoed is also a senseless policy.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, the House passed the Army appropriation bill on February 16, and it was like unto the one now before us. That bill went to the Senate. That body struck out all of the legislative portions of the present bill and of the bill of date February 16. The measure went to conference. The conferees after long and arduous work agreed upon a measure. The two Houses agreed to the conference report, and it went to the President. The President vetoed the measure and sent to Congress his message of date June 17, 1912. He specifically finds fault with the bill to the extent of six provisions in his veto message. As was properly stated by my colleague, the leader of the minority, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], two courses were left open for the Military Affairs Committee of the House, namely, to bring back the bill as vetoed by the President and seek to pass it over his veto or else abandon that course and bring in another measure to be passed by the House. The first course was abandoned. We are now presented with the second course of procedure, namely, by the recommendation into this House of the bill like unto the one passed by the House of date February 16, 1912. The President in his message of veto, on page 1, said:

> Among other things, this legislation reduced the Army by five regiments of Cavalry; it changed the existing term of the soldiers' enlistment; it altered the amounts of pay and conditions of allowances made to officers and enlisted men; it consolidated the three great supply corps of the Army, and also merged The Adjutant General's and Inspector General's departments with the General Staff; it reduced not only the number of general officers of the Army, but also reduced very materially the total number of officers and changed the number and methods of detail of such officers to the various departments; and in other ways made changes which necessarily had a far-reaching effect upon the military policy of the Nation as well as upon the organization with which that policy must be carried out.

That is what the President said under date of June 17, 1912, with reference to the bill passed by the House of date February 16, 1912. The same bill, subject to the same criticism, subject to the same expressions set forth by the President in his message, is here to-day in this House seeking to be passed on its way to the President to meet his views as expressed in his veto message. True it is that of the six provisions that he enumerates in his message three are not applicable to this bill. Three of them are applicable to this bill. What are the three? In his message the President says:

> Second. By reducing the number of the General Staff the bill, in my opinion, tends to cripple the most important corps of the Army—that corps which, though of comparatively recent organization, is performing invaluable work toward the creation of a consistent military policy for the Nation and the organization of an efficient and economical Army. If, as I believe to be the case, this bill would make necessary the reduction of the work of the War College, harm would be done to our military establishment which would be well-nigh incalculable.

If the bill of February 16 contained that well-nigh incalculable harm, this bill contains the same well-nigh incalculable harm.

> Third. By the provisions of the bill which limit the period during which an officer may remain upon detached service or staff duty the organized personnel of many of the most important bureaus and corps of the War Department and military establishment will be disintegrated, and the work now proceeding under them will be seriously impeded. While these provisions aim at a wise purpose and one which my administration has sought to carry out by Executive action with especial thoroughness, the enactments of this bill are deemed too radical and drastic. By removing at once all of the officers of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, except its chief, they would seriously interfere with the work of that most important bureau in administering the affairs of our insular possessions. Again, they would, on January 1, 1913, relieve all of the officers now assigned to the Philippine Constabulary. Earnest protest has been received from the insular government of the Philippines to the effect that so prompt a relief of all of the officers who have had the especial training and experience necessary for these positions would be disastrous to the morale and efficiency of that important body, and would be a serious handicap to the preservation of law and order in the Philippine Islands.
> Again, the provision would at once relieve all but one of the line officers now on duty in the work of constructing the Panama Canal, and, under a very probable construction of the law, it would also relieve the engineer officers and other staff officers detailed to that work. The organization of the force of officers and men by whom the canal is now being constructed has earned the admiration of the entire Nation. Under this organization that work is fast approaching its completion. The drastic character of the provision can be best understood when it is considered that it might at once relieve from duty the general purchasing officer of the Isthmian Commission, by whom all of the complicated machinery for the locks and gates is being purchased; the officer who is building the Gatun Dam and the spillway; the line officer who, as chief engineer, is relocating the Panama Railroad; the officer in charge of the construction of the new breakwater at Colon; and the medical officer under whose inspection the sanitary work of the zone is being conducted. It would be practically impossible to replace these men or the special knowledge and skill which they have in their departments of the work. The entire organization of the great work in which they are almost indispensable agents would be disintegrated and impaired.
> The fact that a single provision of the bill can cause such serious consequences offers further evidence of the unwisdom of a method which deprives legislation of its usual safeguards of scrutiny and discussion.

That provision was in the bill in a broader sense on date of February 16, 1912. The conferees modified that provision and made it affect a less number of officers, but the President saw fit to veto it and especially called attention to it. The measure which is before the House to-day makes this provision broader than the provisions which the President vetoed. On page 6, beginning with line 21, you find:

> That no money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any officer for any period during which he shall have been detached for any duty of any kind for more than four of the preceding six years from the organization in which he is commissioned, unless such continuous detachment from such organization for more than four years shall have been specifically authorized by law.

If the lesser provision brought forth the lightning of the President in the form of a veto, can we hope or expect the broader provision will share a less fate at his hands? And yet we are asked to pass it.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRINCE. Certainly.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman does not want the House to misunderstand him, certainly.

Mr. PRINCE. No, sir.

Mr. HAY. The provision which the gentleman has just read says that unless otherwise specifically provided by law. Now, it is specifically provided by law that a lieutenant colonel and colonel can be redetailed.

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. HAY. So that the statement the gentleman makes that it applies to everybody and all officers is not correct.

Mr. PRINCE. Except those specifically authorized by law. I have read the whole provision.

Mr. HAY. The House did not understand it.

Mr. PRINCE. I want the House to understand it, because I read it just as the provision is. If I have by argument sought to enlarge it, the provision governs instead of my argument.

Mr. HAY. I know.

Mr. PRINCE. The next objection made by the President is on page 4, and is as follows:

> Fourth. The second section of the bill lengthens the term of enlistment from three to four years. This change has been opposed by the recommendations of the President, the Secretary of War, and the General Staff of the Army. It will tend to make difficult or impossible the establishment of a proper reserve by which the Regular Army could, in time of emergency, be brought up to its full strength. In my opinion it is a step contrary to enlightened military policy.

The bill of February 16, 1912, contains that provision which the President specifically vetoed. The bill under consideration, which we are asked to pass to-day, has the same provision which the President vetoed under date of June 17, 1912. Now, I do not, Mr. Speaker, care to go into an argument of this bill more fully. For eight days we had it before us in February. We discussed it from every angle we could. We made objections to the bill, offered amendments, made points of order, but the other side of the House, being in control, voted us down and passed it out of this body. When the conference report came back this side of the House again exercised its rights under the rules and under the Constitution.

We again made specific objections in the shape of points of order for hours, for almost a day we discussed them here in this body. We were overruled and the bill finally passed and went to the President and received his veto. To-day we do not want to appear to be captious in the slightest degree. We merely want to preserve our rights and our integrity as to our views as expressed heretofore upon this great measure. We are fully aware that owing to conditions many Members of this House are away upon other duties, discharging them by direction of their States in another body, seeking to nominate a candidate for the Presidency. We know that if we insist upon a roll call here to-day that we would only delay its passage in this body. We know that if we would exercise our constitutional rights by calling for a quorum, by asking for a roll call, that men could be brought here from 40 miles away, if not to-day to-morrow or the day following, but we do not desire to do anything of the kind. We have been anxious all along to hurry legislation, to get it out of this House and get this House and its coordinate branch to adjourn and finish up this Congress. [Applause.] But here we are after the 1st of July. On the 31st of May, when the Military Academy bill was up for consideration, I called attention then to the condition of the calendar with reference to the appropriation bills. More than a month has passed between that time and this, and yet we have not passed the appropriation bills necessary to conduct the affairs of this Government. For the first time in many years yesterday we were called upon to pass a joint resolution to continue the great affairs of this Government in its various branches by a resolution making appropriations for at least one month's pay for this Government. I do not want to repeat the arguments I made then, but I want the country to see the conditions; I want the country to know just exactly how matters stand; and I want the country to know in addition that this side of the House does not stand here as obstructionists; that we are willing and able to hurry up as fast as we can legislation, but we give you notice now, we give the country notice, and we give the President notice that we are not in favor of this measure; that we are as unalterably opposed to it now as we were when we voted against it on its passage in this House, I think on February 16, 1912. So that we say to you who are responsible for legislation, so we say to you to whom the people have given the control of the House of Representatives, go on with your legislation without obstruction on our part, go on and pass this bill and present it, if you see fit, to the President with the assurance that he has given you in his veto message, push it up again against the buzz saw if you want to; it is your action and not ours, but we enter our protest as far as we can as Members of the House. We shall not, however, insist upon a quorum, we shall not insist upon a roll call; we will permit you to pass it and move it on to the other body, and then when they act upon it and it comes to a conference, I hope that the second sober judgment of the conferees will act along the lines suggested by the leader on our side of the House [Mr. MANN], my colleague, and we will try to harmonize this legislation; that we will try to put in shape that which meets the wishes of the Executive as expressed in his veto message, and we will not try to do that which will be in the shape of obstruction, but finally obtain legislation for the good of the country and for the good of the Army. [Applause.]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have addressed the House on the subject of this bill may be allowed to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that gentlemen who have addressed the House on this bill may have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. For how long?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. For five legislative days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For five legislative days. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LEVER, for 10 days, on account of sickness in family.

To Mr. AUSTIN, for 1 day, on account of sickness.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Wednesday, July 3, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of State submitting item for reappropriation for the expenses of arbitration of outstanding pecuniary claims between the United States and Great Britain in accordance with the special agreement concluded for that purpose August 18, 1910 (H. Doc. No. 860); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with law (4 Stat. L., 430), papers in the claim of Charlotte E. Rockwell, widow of Thomas H. Rockwell, late of Company E, Third New York Volunteer Infantry, original No. 836013 (H. Doc. No. 859); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SCULLY: Petition of the Daughters of Liberty of New Jersey and Pride of Hickering Council, No. 927, Order of Independent Americans, Charlestown, Pa., both favoring passage of House bill 22527, for restriction of immigration; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Cleveland, Ohio, favoring passage of the workmen's compensation act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. J. M. C. SMITH: Paper to accompany bill granting pension to Elizabeth A. Campbell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, July 3, 1912.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

Mr. BACON took the chair as President pro tempore under the previous order of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. LODGE and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

UNRIGGED VESSELS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4445) concerning unrigged vessels, which were, on page 1, line 3, after "by," to insert "a"; on page 1, line 3, to strike out "shipbuilders" and insert "shipbuilder"; on page 1, line 4, after "that," to insert "an"; on page 1, line 4, to strike out "vessels" and insert "vessel of the United States"; on page 1, line 5, to strike out "have" and insert "has"; and, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "are" and insert "is."

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

WHITE RIVER DAM, ARK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20347) to authorize the Dixie Power Co. to construct a dam across White River at or near Cotter, Ark., and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask that the bill and amendments may lie on the table, without prejudice, subject to the further action of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill and amendments will lie on the table until called up by the Senator from Arkansas.

CORBETT TUNNEL, WYOMING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4862) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to investigate and settle certain accounts, and for other purposes, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That all persons having supplied labor or materials for the prosecution of the work of constructing the Corbett Tunnel as a part of the Shoshone irrigation project in the State of Wyoming, under any contract or contracts let for that purpose by the Government of the United States, and their assigns and legal representatives, are hereby given the full rights and remedies awarded to persons supplying labor and materials in the prosecution of public works, as set forth in the act of August 13, 1894, entitled "An act for the protection of persons furnishing materials and labor for the construction of public works," to the same force, extent, and effect as if the act had not been amended, modified, or repealed, with full right of action in the name of the United States for his or their use and benefit against any contractor or contractors and their sureties upon any bond or bonds furnished to the United States under any such contract: Provided, That no action prosecuted under this act shall involve the United States in any expense; and to amend the title so as to read: "An act for the relief of certain persons having supplied labor and materials for the prosecution of the work of constructing the Corbett Tunnel of the Shoshone irrigation project."

Mr. BORAH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 19409. An act granting certain lands to the town of Yuma, Ariz.;

H. R. 25069. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 25531. An act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (No. 57) requesting the President to return to the House the bill (H. R. 23515) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 458. An act for the relief of the Turner Hardware Co.;

S. 897. An act for the relief of Alfred L. Dutton;

S. 1293. An act for the relief of Herbert Thompson;

S. 1754. An act for the relief of William F. McKim;

S. 4180. An act for the relief of Alessandro Comba;

S. J. Res. 94. Joint resolution providing for the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, in the class other than Members of Congress; and

S. J. Res. 111. Joint resolution to convey the thanks of Congress to Capt. Arthur Henry Rostron, and through him to the officers and crew of the steamship Carpathia, of the Cunard Line, for the prompt and heroic services rendered by them in rescuing 704 lives from the wreck of the steamship Titanic in the North Atlantic Ocean.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Laconia, N. H., praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of Local Union No. 710, Packing House Teamsters and Chauffeurs' Union, of Chicago, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the better protection of American seamen, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented petitions of Local Union No. 841, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, of Carbondale; of Local Union No. 140, Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers' International Alliance, of Normal; and of Local Union No. 4, American Brotherhood of Cement Workers, of Chicago, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the passage of the so-called injunction limitation bill, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ASHURST presented a petition of Local Union No. 476, International Union of Steam Engineers, of Miami, Ariz., praying for the passage of the so-called injunction limitation bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ROOT presented a petition of sundry assistant inspectors of steam vessels at the port of New York, praying for an increase in their salaries, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BRIGGS presented petitions of sundry veterans of the Spanish-American War, residents of Newark, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to pension widow and minor children of any officer or enlisted man who served in the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented petitions of the Cigar Makers' Local Union; of the Typographical Union; of Local Union No. 228, Journeymen Tailors; of Carmen's Local Union No. 540; of Local Union No. 124, Bartenders' League; and of Machinists' Lodge No. 315, of Trenton; and of the International Association of Machinists, of Elizabeth, all in the State of New Jersey, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the method of directing the work of Government employees, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on Fisheries, to which was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. LODGE on the 3d ultimo to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 25069), proposing to appropriate $5,000 to investigate the method of fishing known as beam or otter trawling, reported it without amendment, submitted a report (No. 903) thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed, which was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 7195) to authorize the Great Northern Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 902) thereon.

Mr. DU PONT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1739) to amend section 4875 of the Revised Statutes, to provide a compensation for superintendents of national cemeteries, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WARREN. On June 27 the message from the President of the United States recommending an appropriation to defray the expenses of camps and maneuvers of the Organized Militia during the coming summer was received and was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I ask that that committee be discharged from further consideration of the message of the President and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as it relates to items in the Army appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CUSTOMHOUSE BUILDING AT BOSTON, MASS.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 24227) to amend section 11 of an act entitled "An act to grant additional authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out certain provisions of public-building acts, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1909. I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should like to have the Senator from Massachusetts state the purpose of the bill. I have not seen it.

Mr. LODGE. Congress appropriated for the new customhouse at Boston $1,800,000 and included in that appropriation the cost of taking temporary quarters during the change and all expenses connected with the removal to temporary quarters and back again. It has been found absolutely impossible to complete the building and pay those expenses out of the fund appropriated for the building. This is simply to allow the original amount to go for the construction of the building and to pay those expenses separately. The bill has passed the House after very full hearing and discussion. It is absolutely necessary for the completion of the building, which is now under way.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN HARNEY NATIONAL FOREST.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. From the Committee on Public Lands, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 21259) to allow an exchange of certain lands in the Harney National Forest, and I submit a report (No. 901) thereon. As it is in the nature of a correction of an act already passed by both Houses, I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that the bill be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary again read the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey:

A bill (S. 7228) granting an increase of pension to James McMahon (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 7229) to make desert-land entries eligible to patent by means of the dry-farming process; to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 7230) to grant an honorable discharge to John E. Simmons (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WORKS:

A bill (S. 7231) granting an increase of pension to Samuel E. Merriam (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 7232) granting an increase of pension to Carrie M. Mathews (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 7233) granting an increase of pension to William J. Heal (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 7234) granting an increase of pension to Andrew E. Clark (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 7235) granting an increase of pension to Isaac A. Conant (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 7236) granting an increase of pension to Charles G. Glidden (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 7237) to reserve certain lands and to incorporate the same and make them a part of the Santiam National Forest; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 7238) granting a pension to Jane M. Brown (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 7239) to correct the military record of John W. Cleavenger; and

A bill (S. 7240) to correct the military record of William S. Hess; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 7241) granting a pension to Samuel Jackson;

A bill (S. 7242) granting a pension to Marshall Ray;

A bill (S. 7243) granting a pension to Mrs. D. H. Crews;

A bill (S. 7244) granting a pension to Henry Synnamon;

A bill (S. 7245) granting an increase of pension to Timothy Ellison;

A bill (S. 7246) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Bigham;

A bill (S. 7247) granting an increase of pension to James B. Evans (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 7248) granting a pension to Samuel Jackson (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 7249) granting a pension to Margaret A. Graham (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 7250) granting a pension to Lettie Vilatt (with accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 7251) granting a pension to James Thompson (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL (H. R. 25069).

Mr. SMOOT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,500 for the compensation of the clerk and assistant clerk to the Joint Committee on Printing, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $900 for the salary of the terrapin and fish culturist at the biological station, Beaufort, N. C., etc, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the post-office building at St. Petersburg, Fla., in the sum of $25,000, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MILL EMPLOYEES AT LAWRENCE, MASS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I move that the report of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor in regard to the condition of employees in the mills at Lawrence, Mass., be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. SMOOT. This report was submitted to the Senate, I think, on July 1. There were no instructions for printing the document accompanying the reference to the Committee on Printing. It is an exceedingly voluminous report. I do not know how many volumes there will be in it, but quite a number. The expense will be quite heavy. I just want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact, and then Senators can determine whether it is best to be printed as a public document or not. If the Senate thinks best, of course it will be done; but I want to say to the Senator that it will be a very, very expensive piece of work.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Washington will permit me, I will ask the Senator from Utah if an estimate has been made as to the expense of printing this document?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not asked for an estimate, for the reason that there was no instruction to have it printed. But I think before it is printed, if the Senator from Washington desires it to be printed, the best thing to do would be to let it go over, and I will ask for an estimate, and we will know just what the work will cost.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator from Washington that he do that. I will cooperate with him to have this printed if the Senator thinks it desirable. It is now in the hands of the committee, and I think the committee ought to be allowed to make the usual inquiry.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I agree with the Senator as to that matter. The only reason I made the motion was because the chairman of the committee had informed me that they would take no action unless they were so directed by the Senate. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah how long it will be before he can give the Senate an idea of the cost of this printing?

Mr. SMOOT. By Friday or Saturday we will have an estimate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will do that, I will defer the matter until that time.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if this report that he is asking to have printed as a Senate document is a report made pursuant to a resolution of Congress to investigate conditions at Lawrence?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; it was a Senate resolution.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (No. 57) of the House of Representatives, which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 23515) entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the Senate to agree to the resolution.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 19409. An act granting certain lands to the town of Yuma, Ariz., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

H. R. 25069. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

H. R. 25531. An act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. McCUMBER. On the 1st instant the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6084) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, and requested a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the votes by which the House amendments were disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the House be requested to return to the Senate the bill and amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

IRRIGATION PLANT AT GARDEN CITY, KANS.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 6784) for the relief of the Garden City (Kans.) Water Users' Association, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill be read first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands proposes to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized to have appraised, and dispose of at not less than the appraised value, at public or private sale, by sealed bids or otherwise, under such terms as may be approved by him, the irrigation plant built under the terms of the reclamation act of June 17, 1902 (Stat. L., p. 388), located in Finney County, Kans., together with the machinery, wells, pumps, transmission lines, and all other appurtenances, and the lands of the United States on which they are located, either as a whole or separately, in his discretion. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to execute appropriate conveyances for the real property sold hereunder.

SEC. 2. That the contracts heretofore entered into between the Finney County Water Users' Association, of Finney County, Kans., or with individual landowners, and the Secretary of the Interior, for the supply and use of water from the irrigation plant of the United States be, and the same are hereby, canceled and relieved and the liens upon the lands in said county created by such contracts are hereby released and discharged.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas to make a brief statement as to why the bill should pass, and the object of it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the bill as reported was drawn by the Department of the Interior.

About 10 years ago this project was built by the Government and under an agreement to supply water to the members of the water users' association. They have never been able to comply with the contract. The management was not satisfactory and the plant as put in was not feasible.

Two years ago Congress authorized an extension of time to see if proper arrangements could not be made, but they have failed. The plant has not been used for two years or longer. It is in the hands of a carekeeper, who is being paid for taking care of it. The water is not being used; in fact, the machinery is not being used. Nothing is being done with it. The officers of the department think it would be best to sell the machinery and get rid of the plant to the best advantage possible.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question or two in connection with this bill, because it goes to the sufficiency and efficiency of the whole system.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. Was this a pumping plant?

Mr. CURTIS. It was a pumping plant, and one of the first put in; but I understand that the experience of the Government at this plant has caused them to change their plans in other places. I think I was advised by the department that there were but three or four plants put in of this kind.

Mr. HEYBURN. How much did this pumping plant cost?

Mr. CURTIS. Something over $300,000, all told.

Mr. HEYBURN. Where did it get the water?

Mr. CURTIS. The water was supposed to be supplied from a number of wells; I think 20 in number.

Mr. HEYBURN. This was a well proposition?

Mr. CURTIS. This was a well or pumping proposition, including the plant, machinery, and so forth.

Mr. HEYBURN. In what part of the State of Kansas is it located?

Mr. CURTIS. It is in the southwestern part of the State, where they have a great underflow, and this was supposed to tap that underflow.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is an arid region on the surface?

Mr. CURTIS. Semiarid.

Mr. HEYBURN. Semiarid. They bored these, some 15 or 20 of these wells?

Mr. CURTIS. About 20 of them.

Mr. HEYBURN. Did they tap that underground flow of water?

Mr. CURTIS. They did; and I think they made a mistake in trying to carry the water a long distance in sand ditches instead of in cement ditches.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is, they pumped it to the surface and then undertook to distribute it by natural flow over the surface?

Mr. CURTIS. They did; not by the natural flow, but by means of ditches, carrying the water by gravitation.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is, the water flowed naturally?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; for some 10 or 12 miles.

Mr. HEYBURN. Did the ditches leak?

Mr. CURTIS. That water seeped out; yes, sir.

Mr. HEYBURN. And the water that had been pumped up was lost?

Mr. CURTIS. It was largely lost.

Mr. HEYBURN. How many acres were to be supplied?

Mr. CURTIS. About 7,600 acres.

Mr. HEYBURN. The entire cost of this plant was about how much?

Mr. CURTIS. It was over $300,000. I can not tell exactly how much.

Mr. HEYBURN. Did they get any water on any of the lands?

Mr. CURTIS. On a few pieces the first year or two, but it has not been a success.

Mr. HEYBURN. On a few pieces?

Mr. CURTIS. On a few tracts.

Mr. HEYBURN. But practically not at all?

Mr. CURTIS. Not enough to justify the continuance of the plant.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, it is proposed to sell the plant and the machinery, I suppose?

Mr. CURTIS. It is proposed to sell the machinery, because the principal expense has been in putting in the machinery.

Mr. HEYBURN. Why do they not move it to some other plant?

Mr. CURTIS. That was considered by the department; and, I understand, they thought it would be better to sell it, because other pumping plants are being used successfully in that neighborhood, where they pump water directly on the land and do not try to carry it in ditches 6 or 8 or 10 miles, and there should be a demand for the plant.

Mr. HEYBURN. Has the probable price the machinery will bring been estimated?

Mr. CURTIS. It has not been. The department, of course, knows what it cost. The principal expense was in building the plant and for the machinery.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not seeking to catechize the Senator, but am merely asking these questions for the sake of obtaining information.

Mr. CURTIS. I appreciate that fact.

Mr. HEYBURN. We have a pumping plant in our State, and I am looking for information as to the feasibility of pumping plants. I do not want to see, nor does any Senator desire to see, money expended in the installation of pumping plants unless the results are satisfactory.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, there was a letter written by the department two years ago, which is a part of the files of the committee, asserting that this plant was not feasible, and time was asked to see if it could not be made feasible.

Mr. HEYBURN. When was the plant installed?

Mr. CURTIS. About 10 years ago.

Mr. HEYBURN. And it took them about 10 years to find that out?

Mr. CURTIS. It took them about eight years to find it out.

Mr. ROOT. May I ask the Senator from Kansas a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. ROOT. I should like to ask whether any Government lands have been irrigated or are being irrigated by this plant?

Mr. CURTIS. No Government lands are irrigated by this plant at all.

Mr. ROOT. May I ask, then, what was the warrant of law, the constitutional authority, for the Government to establish this plant and to engage in the business of irrigating private lands?

Mr. CURTIS. That is a question I can not answer. I know that the plant was established. I was not a Senator at the time it was done, but know that it has been established; and that is all that I know about it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CURTIS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. Is the Government to lose all the money that is lost in the process?

Mr. CURTIS. Oh, no. As I have stated, the principal item of expense has been the machinery. The machinery is nearly as good as new, and it ought to bring a good price, if it is transferred to some other locality, to be used. It is just about as good as new machinery.

Mr. SMOOT. Did the water users dig the ditches or did the Government pay for them?

Mr. CURTIS. I can not answer that question positively, but I think the Government dug the ditches.

Mr. SMOOT. Has the Senator any idea as to what the cost will be to the Government in abandoning the plant?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not know what the machinery will bring, but I should judge that it could be sold for about what it cost; and I understand that most of the money was put into machinery.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas further yield?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Government built the ditches and they were unsuitable for the purpose of carrying the water, then that would be a dead loss, would it not?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly; but the ditches were dug in sand and could not have been very expensive.

Mr. HEYBURN. Did the Government drill the wells?

Mr. CURTIS. The wells are only 20 feet deep, and there was little expense in drilling wells of that depth.

Mr. HEYBURN. And this plant, as the Senator from Kansas has stated in response to a question of the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], was installed solely for commercial purposes, to sell water to owners of land in which the Government had no interest?

Mr. CURTIS. So I understand—under certain contracts.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think it would be very difficult to find any warrant of law for that kind of procedure. I should like to have seen a pretty thorough investigation in a case of this kind, so as to perpetuate the facts for future reference, because all sorts of experiments are being tried. I am thoroughly in sympathy with the system of irrigating the public lands, but I am not in favor of the Government engaging in the business of producing water and selling it to private owners.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I assume, Mr. President, that if the matter shall remain as it is now this will be a dead loss to the Government——

Mr. CURTIS. It is a dead loss; it is an expense every year.

Mr. GALLINGER. While, if the terms of the bill are complied with and the property is sold, the Government will recoup itself to some extent.

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Kansas is optimistic when he says that the Government will get as much for the machinery as it originally cost.

Mr. CURTIS. I did not mean that. I meant about as much as it cost, as the machinery is in good condition.

Mr. GALLINGER. It seems to me that inasmuch as it seems to be definitely settled that this project is a failure, the sooner the Government unloads it the better, because the Government will get back a part of the money that has been expended. For that reason I shall vote for the bill.

I am a believer in the irrigation project, although it does not affect my part of the country; I have given it my support; but I have taken occasion several times to say that I think there has been very great mismanagement on the part of somebody in establishing these irrigation projects in certain sections of the West, and it seems to me that this is a demonstration that, at least in one instance, there has been a lack of judgment or good business sense in expending the public money. If this matter will lead to an inquiry along the lines suggested by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], as to the propriety or feasibility of establishing pumping stations, or whatever you may call them, it may save us some money in the future. I shall vote for the Senator's bill on the ground that we had better get something out of this rather than to have a dead loss to the Government and to the people of the country.

Mr. HEYBURN. A further question, if the Senator from Kansas will permit me.

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. Does this bill provide for a report being made to Congress of the result of this sale?

Mr. CURTIS. It does not.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, I think it should provide for an account being stated regarding this enterprise.

Mr. CURTIS. I am perfectly willing that an amendment of that kind be attached to the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have not at hand a copy of the bill, and I think it has not been reprinted.

Mr. CURTIS. That can be provided for by a resolution at any time.

Mr. HEYBURN. We can just as easily provide for it in this bill. I now have a copy of the bill, and I will move to amend by adding to section 3 a proviso——

Mr. GALLINGER. Why not make it a separate section?

Mr. HEYBURN. Very well; I will make it a separate section. I move to amend by adding as a new section the following:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior shall make to Congress a statement of the expenditure connected with this reclamation project and the amount received from its sale.

I think that covers it.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this enterprise is perhaps a failure in a sense; but it is no surprise that in initiating or inaugurating a great scheme of reclamation of the arid lands, such as was inaugurated a few years ago, there should be some mistakes. I ask, however, Senators to bear in mind that these mistakes are not borne by the Treasury, but they are borne by the people who are out upon the land, and we need not be disturbed over the fact that a few dollars are lost, so far as the Government is concerned. We are going to have to take up very shortly, however, the subject of relieving the settlers from the burden of any mistakes which have been made in any of these enterprises. If mistakes are made, which ought not to be a surprise, still the Government must in the end bear the same. Any unnecessary or mistaken charges should not be charged against the settler. I propose later to submit this whole proposition in proper form for the consideration of the Congress.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I would not like to have it understood that I was antagonistic to the reclamation system; on the contrary I have always been one of its most ardent supporters. I think, however, where an effort was made, as it was made in this case, and it has not succeeded, we should obtain the information as a guide to us in our future action. There can be no objection to having the facts in the case.

Mr. BORAH. I have no objection to having the facts in this particular instance, but I do object to the general criticism which seems to be lodged against the department, because, as I have said, while this particular enterprise may have been a failure, it is no surprise that there should be misjudgment in one particular instance, or even in several instances. The matter was wholly a new proposition and must necessarily be worked out with experience and, therefore, result in some mistakes. I said a moment ago, whatever mistakes there have been have been lodged upon the settlers, and when we get ready to rectify these mistakes we ought not to direct our attention so much to the Public Treasury as to relieving the settlers of the mistakes and exempting them from the results of these mistakes.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to his colleague?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. BRISTOW. I myself regret that the Government has not continued the operation of this plant. I understand the theory is that the water has to be lifted farther than is justified by pumping in order to secure water to irrigate the crops that are grown there. As I understand, the water has to be lifted about 15 feet, has it not?

Mr. CURTIS. The difficulty is not so much in raising the water as it is in carrying it and putting it upon lands that are located a long distance from the pumping plant and the wells.

Mr. BRISTOW. The objection, as I understand from the officers in charge, was that the department had concluded that the water was costing more than it was worth. I do not believe that it ought to cost more than it is worth; but I am not going to antagonize the wishes of the department in disposing of this plant, because I believe it will be acquired by somebody who will make a success of it. The department has failed, but I think that failure is due more to prejudice against the proposition than it is to anything else.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] to the amendment reported by the committee. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add a new section to read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior shall make to Congress a statement of the expenditure connected with this reclamation project and the amount received from its sale.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMY MANEUVERS.

Mr. DU PONT. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 332) appropriating $1,350,000 for encampment and maneuvers for the Organized Militia, to report it favorably with amendments. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the joint resolution whether it carries the same amount that was appropriated in the Army appropriation bill?

Mr. DU PONT. I will say to the Senator from Utah that I understand it to be exactly the same amount.

My attention has been called to the fact that the resolving clause of the joint resolution as it passed the House is not in the form required by law or statute. I therefore move to amend the resolving clause by striking out the words "Be it," in the first line of the joint resolution, and inserting the words "of America" after "United States," in line 2. I do so in order to make it conform to the statute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the resolving clause of the joint resolution so as to conform to the statute and to read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 20728, being the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20728) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

Mr. CLAPP. I call attention to page 11, which was passed day before yesterday, and, in line 1, after the word "to," to strike out "pay" and insert "approve the payment of." It would seem as it is that this is an authority for the payment of money, whereas payment has already been made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, in the committee amendment, line 1, strike out the word "pay," the last word in the line, and insert "approve the payment of," so that it will read:

The accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby directed to approve the payment of the salary of H. C. Phillips.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I was called from the Chamber when the bill was under consideration before. I will ask the Senator from Minnesota if the bill has been concluded, so far as the committee amendments are concerned?

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, no; but I will treat the Senator's amendment as a committee amendment, if the Senator wishes to offer it now.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, when this bill was before the Senate a few days ago there was more or less discussion as to the paragraph on page 5, commencing with line 20, and including line 24, which reads:

To relieve distress among Indians and to provide for their care and for the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis, trachoma, smallpox, and other contagious and infectious diseases, including the purchase of vaccine and expense of vaccination.

In the House bill $60,000 was appropriated. I believe the recommendation was that it should be $250,000, and it was compromised by making it $150,000.

I took occasion when the matter was up before to make some observations as to the indefiniteness of the prevalence of these diseases among the Indians, recognizing the fact that they existed, but not being satisfied as to the accuracy of the statements concerning their prevalence. One Senator, for instance, said he understood that about 70 per cent of the Indians in the United States were afflicted with trachoma, an infectious disease of the eyes. It seemed to me extraordinary that that could possibly be the fact.

Mr. President, we propose to expend $150,000 to relieve this condition, provided the bill as amended is agreed to by the conferees. I desire to offer an amendment to that paragraph making a small appropriation for an investigation of this matter, with a view to having definite information when the next bill shall be under consideration, and I send to the desk the amendment I propose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 24, after the word "dollars," insert:

Provided, That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to enable the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service to make a thorough examination as to the prevalence of tuberculosis, trachoma, smallpox, and other contagious and infectious diseases among the Indians of the United States, full report to be made to Congress not later than February 1, 1913, with such recommendations as may be deemed advisable.

Mr. CLAPP. The committee will accept that as a committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The Chair understands that the amendment preceding that has already been agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair at that time.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to offer an amendment on page 5——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Committee amendments under the order are first to be considered.

Mr. GRONNA. I understand that the chairman——

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will yield to me for a moment, I think if we can at this time pass these matters, which are somewhat formal, we may as well close them up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well.

Mr. CLAPP. Therefore I will treat it as a committee amendment, and the Senator can offer it.

Mr. GRONNA. On page 5, line 11, strike out "seventy-five" and insert "one hundred." This was not estimated for, as I understand, when the bill was before the committee, but the President pro tempore laid before the Senate yesterday a letter which fully explains the importance of the amendment I now offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 11, strike out "seventy-five" and in lieu insert "one hundred," so that if amended it will read:

For the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians, including the illegal introduction of intoxicating liquors into the State of Oklahoma, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I notice the Secretary read that provision as though the words "including the illegal introduction of intoxicating liquors into the State of Oklahoma" were in the paragraph. Strictly speaking they were stricken out, although I am going to move to reinsert them, and at this point I move to reconsider the vote by which those words were stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota moves to reconsider the vote by which the Senate disagreed to the amendment found on page 5, lines 10 and 11. Without objection the motion to reconsider is agreed to. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota—to what effect?

Mr. CLAPP. To agree to the amendment as it has been amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 14 there is an item which went over. I move that the Senate agree to the Senate amendment on page 14.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment on page 14, the Chair being informed that it has not yet been reported to the Senate.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, line 3, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the proportion of the cost of the irrigation project on the Gila River Indian Reservation heretofore and herein authorized to be paid from the public funds shall be repaid into the Treasury of the United States as and when funds may be available therefor: Provided further, That in the event any allottee shall receive a patent in fee to an allotment of land irrigated under this project before the United States shall have been wholly reimbursed as herein provided, then the proportionate cost of the project, to be apportioned equitably by the Secretary of the Interior, shall become a first lien on such allotment, and the fact of such lien shall be recited on the face of each patent in fee issued and the amount of the lien set forth therein, which said lien, however, shall not be enforced so long as the original allottee or his heirs shall own the allotment; and the receipt of the Secretary of the Interior, or of the officer, agent, or employee duly authorized by him for that purpose, for the payment of the amount assessed against any allotment as herein provided shall, when duly recorded by the recorder of deeds in the county wherein the land is located, operate as a satisfaction of such lien.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment just read.

Mr. CLAPP. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] to this amendment. It is a matter which was passed over on his request. It comes in at the place where we make provision for the Pima Indians. The charges for irrigation, so long as they retain the title, will not be collected, but will become collectible upon their sale of the land.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it is an embargo upon transfer. Do I understand that it would be an accumulated charge in the event of an attempt to sell at the end of five years, or would it only result in charges being collected after the sale?

Mr. CLAPP. It is the proportionate cost of the project. I wish to say that this is done by the Federal Government as a gratuity, and it is in the nature of a limitation upon the gratuity. So long as the Indian himself or his heirs enjoys the gratuity the Government does not enforce it, but if the Indian desires to sell his land then it becomes a charge against the land.

Mr. HEYBURN. The difficulty seems to me to arise out of the failure to take into consideration the fact that the Indian already owns the land.

Mr. CLAPP. He owns the land, but does not own this increased value the Government gives by reason of the irrigation.

Mr. HEYBURN. But he is not asking for this blessing. He is content to own the land. Now along comes a very generous patron who says, "We will add to the value of your property upon which you are living perfectly content at present, and we will put a burden upon it that will prevent you from ever selling it."

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will pardon an interruption, I do not think his deduction is properly drawn. This land would be worthless without water. While there are some Indians who do not yet appreciate the value, the average Indian to-day does desire to have an increased value placed upon his allotment. As to these particular Indians I am not able to state; they may not have asked for this; but I do know that in many instances the Indians have asked that we appropriate money to irrigate their land, and it is not in all cases forced upon them.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I think the Government should make provision for irrigating the Indian lands where they need irrigation. Some grave mistakes have been made. For instance, in the case of the Pocatello Indian Reservation, they provided for a large payment in money to the Indians. They should have provided for an expenditure of the money to bring water on the land. That is only one instance. I could name a number of such instances. We ought to get away from that class of mistakes in dealing with these funds that might be applied to the irrigation of Indian lands. The Indians are not so organized that they themselves can negotiate loans or organize water companies or do the ordinary things that are available to other citizens.

I did not intend to precipitate a general consideration of the question of irrigating Indian lands when I made this suggestion. I merely intended to do no more than call attention to it in passing.

It is a tribe of Indians with which I have little or no acquaintance. I am not familiar enough with the facts to say whether or not these Indians have been given lands in severalty that were of no value except that they afterwards be subjected to the burden of irrigation at the expense of the Government with a forfeiture clause, because this amounts to a forfeiture clause, in the event they want to sell the lands.

The Indian to-day is a very different proposition from the Indian of a few years ago. Our Indians are just as capable of transacting business as their white neighbors, and it is a farce to talk about having guardians over them. A great evil in the last 12 years has grown out of the erroneous idea that the Indians must have a guardian. They were getting along very well 12 years ago. In many instances they were capable of making contracts satisfactory to them in regard to the use of their lands. But a lot of men who wanted a job, men who wanted to multiply the necessity for offices, got in and said, "No, Mr. Indian, you may think you are wise; you may conduct yourselves so that other people will think you are; but we would not have any job unless we got the opportunity to get possession of your land and treat you as though you were not intelligent human beings."

I know from observation, as do many other Senators, that the idea that the Indian is a ward who must be taken care of and administered is no longer based upon facts. We have tribes of Indians where I have attended the commencement exercises, and I have witnessed the commencement exercises of schools where the Indians were as good performers as you would find anywhere in the United States. Farmers who ride upon their reapers and binders and sulky plows and have stock and homes as others are not to be treated as the wards of anybody. They are more like barons. Take them down on the Umatilla Reservation or on the Nez Perce Reservation; they employ white men to work for them, because they are rich enough to do it. They have a larger balance to their credit in the banks than any other class of people, and notably so. Now, if we are going to treat them as though they were children in violation of their rights we must account for it.

I was rather interested in the little discussion that preceded this section and the talk about spending $100,000 to investigate the cause of the difficulty with the Indians' eyes. When I first went among the Indians, a good bit more than 30 years ago, they lived in tepees with the fire even on the ground and the only outlet for the smoke was the unfurled peak of their wigwam or tent, and they all had what we called "blinky" eyes. Their eyes were opening and shutting all the time from habit and necessity growing out of the smoky condition inside their tepees. That is no disease. It probably resulted in a general weakness of the eyes. It did not appear until the Indians were pretty well grown, and then you would see young Indians of both sexes, especially female Indians who would be in the tepees more of the time than the male Indians, who had acquired the habit of opening and shutting the eyes constantly, and not being able to hold them open as others not subjected to those conditions. Yet we have been talking about spending $100,000 to find out the cause of something that is termed a disease, that is no disease at all.

I merely speak these words of admonition. In dealing with the Indians we must recognize that they are progressive people, too, as well as some others.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, to correct one erroneous thought that might flow from the Senator's remarks I want to say that this is not the imposition of a burden upon the Indians. Primarily this fund would be repayable in regular terms. It is the extension of the payment indefinitely on condition that the Indian shall remain the owner of the land.

Mr. HEYBURN. It was because of that I asked the Senator the question whether or not this applied when the Indians sold the land and thenceforward, or whether there was an accumulated charge to be taken into account and when they sold the land that would have to do with it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, this particular item leads me to call the attention of the Senate at this time to the very different treatment accorded the Indians and the white men not only at Yuma, but all over the West. We have been attempting, under the irrigation scheme at Yuma, to extend the time of payment which the farmers owe the Government for that project. Contracting for a few million dollars, the Government has finally a claim against those people for a vast sum of money running into the millions. Under the terms of their agreement with the farmers those debts will soon fall due. Inasmuch as the farmers are at great expense outside of the contract that they have with the Government they feel that their time for payment should be extended. I purpose, if I can during this session, to get an extension of that time.

I will not delay this bill now, but I call the attention of the Senate to the fact and to the absolute necessity of the Government dealing some sort of favor to those people, as is shown in the effort here to do a very great justice to the Indians in this matter. I shall content myself now with this mere observation.

Mr. CLAPP. I wish to say, Mr. President, I am thoroughly familiar with the case the Senator refers to; it is a meritorious case, and when the time comes, for one I shall be very glad to contribute my small influence in securing a remedy.

I ask for the adoption of the amendment on page 14.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I call the attention of the Senate to page 21 and offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, after line 9, insert the following item:

For the construction of buildings for agency headquarters on the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation in Idaho, $30,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Is that estimated for?

Mr. CLAPP. It was not estimated for. It is a supplemental estimate which the department sent in.

Mr. HEYBURN. The report of the department is here.

Mr. CLAPP. The department recommended it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I now desire to call the attention of the Senate to page 39. In the items under "North Carolina," I desire to move the following committee amendment:

On line 18, in lieu of the word "twenty-six," insert "thirty-one"; on line 19, in lieu of "six," insert "five"; and on line 19, in lieu of the word "fifty," insert "sixty."

It seems that the amount placed in the bill was a misprint, and these are to correct it to conform to the estimate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, line 18, strike out "twenty-six" and insert "thirty-one"; line 19, strike out "six" and insert "five"; and line 19, before the word "dollars," strike out "fifty" and insert "sixty," so that if amended it will read:

For support and education of 180 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Cherokee, N. C., and for pay of superintendent, $31,560.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I move to further amend by making the total agree to the figures which have been substituted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be agreed to, changing the total as stated.

Mr. CLAPP. I now desire to call attention to page 55. I offer the following amendment to be inserted after line 3 after the amendments already inserted upon that page.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 55, just above the subhead "Oregon," insert:

That the act of Congress approved February 19, 1912 (Public, No. 91), being an act to provide for the sale of the surface of the coal and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and for other purposes, be, and the same is hereby, amended to provide that the classification and appraisement of such lands shall be completed not later than February 1, 1913.

Mr. CLAPP. That is to extend the time for making the classification. The amendment is offered on the request of the department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. On the same page, following the amendment just agreed to, I offer the following committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. To follow the amendment just agreed to, insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to report to Congress at the opening of the next session of Congress as to the advisability and the probable cost of securing homes in Oklahoma and New Mexico for the Apache Indians now held as prisoners of war on the Fort Sill Military Reservation, Okla.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] to the amendment I am about to offer. Some time ago the Senate passed a bill authorizing the exchange of homestead allotments on the Osage Reservation, subject to the authority of the Secretary of the Interior. I realize that it is legislation. In the absence of the Senator from Oklahoma I shall offer it as an amendment, following the amendment just agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I make the point of order against the amendment. I will wait until after it is read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On what ground does the Senator make the point of order?

Mr. CURTIS. That it is general legislation and the cost has not been estimated for.

Mr. CLAPP. It does not involve any cost.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would suggest that the amendment should first be read. I do not know what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just agreed to, on page 55, insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to permit the exchange of homesteads or other allotments, or any portions thereof, of Osage allottees under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe and upon such terms as he shall approve: Provided, That where a homestead or homesteads pass in the exchange, in whole or in part, an equivalent in value of land suitable for agricultural purposes shall be furnished, to be designated as a homestead. The new homestead shall be subject to the same restrictions as the original homestead. The Secretary shall have authority to do any and all things necessary to make these exchanges effective. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized, in his discretion and upon application, to remove restrictions upon alienation of all or only a described portion of the surplus lands of any Osage allottee.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, that being a general bill and having passed the Senate I think I shall insist upon the point of order. It is general legislation in an Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. CLAPP. There is no question as to the soundness of the point that is raised. I would say that it is a bill that has been recommended by the committee and by the department and it has passed the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Minnesota to concur in the opinion that it is general legislation.

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, certainly, it is general legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire, now, to call attention to the pages of the bill from 29 to 33, which were passed over, beginning at line 23 on page 29.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that all of those items relating to Montana were passed over.

Mr. CLAPP. They were passed over. If the Secretary will read them we may take them up in the order in which they appear.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the portion of the bill heretofore passed over, beginning on page 28, line 10, under the heading "Montana."

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 28, line 12, after the word "employees," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty-five," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 10. For support and civilization of the Indians at Fort Belknap Agency, Mont., including pay of employees, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 29, line 5, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "four," so as to read:

For continuing the construction of irrigation systems to irrigate the allotted lands of the Indians of the Flathead Reservation, in Montana, and the unallotted irrigable lands to be disposed of under authority of law, including the necessary surveys, plans, and estimates, $400,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I hope that amendment will not be agreed to. The department only asks for $250,000. I think the amendment provides for too large an increase, and I hope the acting chairman of the committee will agree that the amendment may be voted down and accept an amendment giving the amount which the department asks, which is $250,000.

Mr. CLAPP. The acting chairman will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas, and move that the amendment be rejected and that the House provision stand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be disagreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Now, I suggest that we make the amount $250,000, which is the sum asked for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, line 5, after the word "hundred," it is proposed to insert the words "and fifty," so that it will read "$250,000."

Mr. CLAPP. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs passed over was, on page 29, in line 7, after the date "1910," to insert "$50,000, to be immediately available."

Mr. CLAPP. I ask that the amendment may be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 29, line 8, after the date "1910," to strike out:

Provided, That no portion of the amount herein appropriated shall be used for continuing the construction of irrigation systems, except upon the Jacko and Pablo units now under construction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 29, line 17, before the word "thousand," to insert "and fifty," so as to read:

For continuing the construction of irrigation systems to irrigate the allotted lands of the Indians of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, in Montana, and the unallotted irrigable lands to be disposed of under authority of law, including the necessary surveys, plans, and estimates, $150,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 1, 1907.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest that that amendment ought to be disagreed to. The department only asked for $100,000 for that work.

Mr. CLAPP. It is clearly subject to the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be disagreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 29, line 19, after the date "1907," to strike out:

Provided, That no portion of the amount herein appropriated shall be used for continuing the construction of irrigation systems, except upon the Two Medicine unit now under construction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 29, after line 22, insert:

For continuing construction of irrigation systems to irrigate allotted lands of the Indians of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation in Montana, including necessary surveys, plans, and estimates, $75,000, reimbursable, the same to be immediately available.

Mr. CLAPP. I move to amend the amendment by increasing the appropriation from $75,000 to $100,000, in line 1, on page 30. I do that because that is the estimate, and, I take it, there may have been some mistake in copying the amendment. So I offer the amendment now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment, on page 30, line 1, before the word "thousand," by striking out "seventy-five" and inserting "one hundred," so as to read "$100,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to the fact that as the words "the same to be immediately available" are to be stricken from the bill there ought to be some words, I think, either preceding or following the word "reimbursable," either "to be reimbursable," or, as in former paragraphs, "in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 1, 1907."

Mr. CLAPP. I will say to the Senator that it is quite the custom now to use the language in the bill, but the words suggested by the Senator can be inserted if it is so desired.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection, but I noticed in a preceding section attention was called to a certain case where such language was used.

Mr. CLAPP. Sometimes it is "the same to be reimbursable."

Mr. GALLINGER. "The same to be reimbursable." I will make that suggestion.

Mr. CLAPP. I accept the suggestion on behalf of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," on page 30, line 1, it is proposed to amend the amendment by inserting "the same to be," so as to read "the same to be reimbursable," and so forth.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs passed over was, on page 30, after line 2, to insert:

There is hereby appropriated the sum of $40,000, to remain available until expended, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to use said money, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in the erection of buildings for agency purposes on the Flathead

Indian Reservation in Montana; for the purchase of lands therein for an agency site not to exceed 80 acres if such is deemed by the Secretary of the Interior to be necessary for the proper location of such agency; for the expenses of the removal of the agency to the new site selected; and for the protection and repair of any other buildings required for the efficient conduct of the affairs of the Flathead Indians in Montana: Provided, That the entire sum expended hereunder for the purposes herein mentioned shall be reimbursed the United States from the proceeds arising from the sale of lands and timber within the Flathead Indian Reservation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 30, after line 19, to insert:

The sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of the funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of surveying the land on the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation, Mont.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 31, to insert:

There is hereby appropriated the sum of $20,000, to remain available until expended, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to use this money, or so much thereof as he may deem necessary, in the purchase of a sawmill and logging equipment and the employment of suitable persons to manufacture and to lumber burned timber on the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont., and to protect the remaining timber from fire and trespass: Provided, That the sum expended under authority of this act shall be reimbursed the United States from the proceeds arising from the sale of lands and timber within said reservation under existing acts of Congress: Provided further, That the amounts paid to persons employed hereunder shall not be included within the limitation of salaries and compensation of employees in the Indian Service contained in the act of June 7, 1897 (13 Stat. L., p. 90).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 32, after line 14, to insert:

That so much of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1911 (36 Stat. L., p. 1066), which provides for the reservation of an easement over tracts of land bordering Flathead Lake, Mont., be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows: "That an easement in, to, and over all lands bordering on or adjacent to Flathead Lake, Mont., which lie below an elevation of 9 feet above the high-water mark of said lake for the year 1909, is hereby reserved for uses and purposes connected with storage for irrigation or development of water power, and all patents hereafter issued for any such lands shall recite such reservation."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if that proposed legislation was requested by the department? It is purely legislation.

Mr. CLAPP. It is, of course, legislation; but it is asked for by the department at the request of the Geological Survey in order to adjust a situation there. The request of the Geological Survey was indorsed by the Department of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs passed over was, on page 33, after line 2, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to withdraw from the Treasury the entire share of the Northern Cheyenne Indians in the permanent fund created under section 17 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889 (U. S. Stat. L., vol. 25, p. 888), and to expend it for the benefit of said Northern Cheyenne Indians in the purchase of stock cattle, or such articles as in his judgment will best advance said Indians in civilization and self-support.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs passed over was, on page 33, after line 12, to insert:

That there is hereby appropriated the sum of $100,000, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purpose of purchasing cattle for the benefit of the Northern Cheyenne Indians, the appropriation herein made to be reimbursable and to be repaid within a period not to exceed 20 years, the first payment to be due and payable within 5 years from the date of this act: Provided, That this appropriation be expended for the benefit of the Northern Cheyenne Indians and also repaid to the Government by said Indians under such terms, conditions, and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill. I do it for this reason: The preceding amendment provides that the money in the Treasury shall be used for the purpose of buying stock cattle for these Indians. That being true, I think it would be best to try the experiment and see how it works before expending more money for the benefit of these Indians. I therefore make the point of order against the amendment, from line 13 to line 25, inclusive, on page 33.

Mr. CLAPP. The committee will have to concede the soundness of the point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I now offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in at the end of the Wisconsin items.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the Wisconsin items, on page 69, after line 5, it is proposed to insert:

That for the purpose of carrying into effect certain treaty stipulations between the United States and the United Nation of Chippewa, Ottawa, and Pottawatomie Indians, and for the purpose of carrying into effect the act of June 25, 1864 (13 Stat. L., p. 172), the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to place upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of that portion of the Wisconsin Band of Pottawatomie Indians now resident in the States of Wisconsin and Michigan the sum of $447,339, the same being the proportionate share of these Indians in annuities and moneys of the Pottawatomie Tribe in which they have not shared, as set forth in the report of the Secretary of the Interior to the House of Representatives, embodied in House Document No. 830, Sixtieth Congress, first session; and said sum shall be immediately available for said purpose. From the said sum the said Secretary is authorized and directed to pay to Mrs. R. B. Belt, widow of R. B. Belt, deceased, the attorney who in his lifetime represented the Wisconsin Band of Pottawatomie Indians in the proceedings, under an accounting set forth in said document, 10 per cent of such sum, in lieu of and in full for the amount due him under the contract approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on the 1st day of November, 1902, which amount shall be immediately available for said purpose; and the balance of said sum placed to the credit of said Indians shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, which said interest shall be distributed per capita under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior to the members of said band now resident in the States of Wisconsin and Michigan, or shall be expended in his discretion for their benefit.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I very much dislike to make a point of order on this amendment. I realize from the report of the Secretary of the Interior that there is that amount of money due these Indians, and I think some arrangement should be made for their payment; but I do believe it unwise on the floor of the Senate to put an item on an Indian appropriation bill providing for the payment of attorneys' fees and matters of that kind. I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will be content simply to offer an amendment authorizing the payment of the interest to these Indians and let the other matter go over until the next session of Congress. The point of order I make against the amendment is that it provides for the payment of a claim; that it has not been estimated for in the regular way; and that it is not proper that it should be placed upon an appropriation bill under Rule XVI.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I would hardly concede, if time warranted a discussion of this matter, the soundness of the point of order. To my mind the amendment is merely to carry out treaty stipulations. I do not know that a provision involving the payment of attorneys for their services where it is necessary to go into the Court of Claims to get the stipulations provided for in the treaty has ever been before the Senate. This is an amount which ought to be settled and adjusted, and it will grow no less by letting it run along. This matter has been before the Senate time and again. However, in view of the fact that the time is so limited, rather than argue the matter—although I would not want to be understood as admitting the soundness of it—I will accept the suggestion and will offer an amendment providing that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to pay interest upon the sum named in the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, that concludes the Senate amendments, with the exception of one on page 68, which was passed over, and to which I call the attention of the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. What page is that?

Mr. CLAPP. Page 68.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will direct the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to the fact that the Secretary informs the Chair that the amendment on page 68, commencing with line 18, was passed over.

Mr. CLAPP. No, sir; my record shows that that was adopted. I remember making the statement. However, to save any question I move the adoption of the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, what amendment are we now speaking of?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read. It is on page 68, commencing at line 18.

Mr. CLAPP. The other is regarded as adopted, I understand.

The SECRETARY. On page 68, after line 17, it is proposed to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of the sum of $1,500,000 set aside and held in the Treasury of the United States for the use and benefit of the Colville Indians under the provisions of an act approved June 21, 1906 (34 Stat. L., p. 337), the sum of $45,000 to Hugh H. Gordon for his individual services in behalf of said Indians, which sum of $45,000 is hereby appropriated for said Gordon's exclusive use and benefit out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the same shall be charged against the funds set aside for the benefit of said Indians.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator will yield, I made a point of order against that amendment yesterday.

Mr. McCUMBER. I was going to ask the Senator to withhold his point of order, at least until we can perfect the amendment. Then I should like to discuss the point of order. I think properly, at least, we can perfect the amendment first.

Mr. CURTIS. I shall very gladly do that, Mr. President, if by doing it I do not waive the right to make the point of order. In my judgment, if a point of order is not made when an amendment is first presented, and it is permitted to be amended and discussed, the point is waived. I may be wrong in that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would hold that the point of order could be made at any stage of the consideration of the matter.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Chair will hold that, I have no objection. I want to make the point of order against the whole of the amendment, and I should like to state the grounds now.

First, it is in violation of section 1 of Rule XVI, in that it adds a new item of appropriation, which is not intended to carry out the provisions of any existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during this session.

Second, it is in violation of section 3 of Rule XVI, in that it proposes general legislation in an appropriation bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I am somewhat acquainted with this particular case and with the litigation that has grown out of it. I do not intend to go into the details of the case, but I do wish to present to the Senate enough of it to enable the Senate to clearly understand not only the merits of the matter, but also the parliamentary question as to whether or not it is proper upon an appropriation bill.

When the Colville Indian Reservation was opened it was opened pursuant to an agreement entered into between the United States and the Colville Indians. It was a treaty or agreement made between the United States and those Indians. Whatever right may exist for payment of funds that shall be appropriated in this bill or otherwise must depend upon a treaty stipulation and relate to that treaty stipulation.

We agreed to pay those Indians a certain sum for the cession of their rights to about one-half of the reservation.

Congress neglected, year after year, to perform its duty. There is no question about that. It was necessary, in order to bring the matter clearly before Congress and to get Congress to take some action toward performing its part of the agreement, that the Indians should employ counsel. That counsel performed his duties. Without the aid of the counsel, in my opinion, upon both the facts and the law in the case, the matter never would have been decided. So, whatever of counsel fees shall be provided in this bill, I for one am in a position to declare from my knowledge of the case that the fees have been honestly earned, and that without those services the Colville Indians would not have had the appropriation.

The counsel who first entered into the agreement with the Indians to demand from the United States the fulfillment of its obligation made a contract with those Indians for the payment to him of 15 per cent upon the amount recovered. That was not an excessive charge. The claimant in this case, Mr. Gordon, was one of the original attorneys, or, perhaps I might say, the original attorney. This contract lapsed by reason of the time specified in which the relief was to be obtained. Afterwards another contract was made, which, as I remember, provided for a fee of 10 per cent, but in which contract Mr. Gordon retained an interest, and other attorneys were introduced into the case.

Mr. CURTIS. May I interrupt the Senator there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. I simply wished to say that, as I understand, that contract was not approved.

Mr. McCUMBER. This contract had expired, at all events, whether it was approved or not. But notwithstanding the expiration of the contract, the services of the attorneys were continued before the department and before the Committee on Indian Affairs, with the consent and at the request of the tribe. Therefore, the services having been performed at the request of the Indians and they having received the benefit of the services, they are in equity estopped from denying the right of the counsel to a reasonable compensation. That was the view taken by the committee a few years ago. The matter was submitted to the Court of Claims as to the right of the Indians to recover the amount to which they were entitled, and the value of the services of the counsel rendered upon a quantum meruit.

Remember that the amount they contracted to pay in the first instance was 15 per cent. In the second instance, I think, it was 10 per cent. Part of the services, and most of them, perhaps, were performed under the original contract calling for a fee of 15 per cent.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will permit me a moment, the fact is that the original contract with the Indians was for 15 per cent. It was submitted to the Interior Department for approval, and the department, while approving the contract in all other particulars, cut down the fee to 10 per cent.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; I knew that was substantially correct. The second understanding was, at least, that it was to be 10 per cent.

When the matter was finally submitted to the Court of Claims that court, as I remember, allowed $1,500,000 as the basis of the claim. Ten per cent upon that would be $150,000. So if even the whole $150,000 had been paid out of that sum to the attorneys it would not have been unjust to the Indians, considering the character of the litigation. But the court awarded as compensation to the attorneys, as I remember, $60,000, which was divided among most of the attorneys who had taken part in the trial of the action and in producing the evidence and presenting the facts before Congress year after year.

Inasmuch as $60,000 was awarded, and that was the limit of the amount allowed for the services of other attorneys, having some knowledge on my own part of the services rendered by the several attorneys, and by this particular attorney who instituted the action in the first instance and has been connected with it all the time, he having received no sum whatever so far for his services, it seems to me that upon a quantum meruit basis he ought to be allowed a reasonable sum. Considering the entire sum received by all, I think $45,000 is more than he should receive.

For that reason, Mr. President, I am going to move to strike out the words "forty-five thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "twenty-five thousand." That leaves the matter still open as to another $14,000, which is still in litigation, and the litigation concerning which, as I am credibly informed, has cost this claimant nearly the full amount of about $14,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. My sympathies have always been with Mr. Gordon, and I want to see him paid; but why was it that he did not receive part of this $60,000?

Mr. McCUMBER. As I remember, $14,000 was awarded as Mr. Gordon's share. Other attorneys interested in the case, directly and indirectly, as was brought out before the committee, brought suits against him, and have tied up this money by injunction or otherwise. The defense of these suits, as I understand, including the costs in the original case, has cost him just about the amount of money involved.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is $14,000, then, that is held up pending litigation, as I understand?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes. But, as I say, the proposed payment of $25,000 and this $14,000, most of which has been used up in litigation, I think would be a fair compensation for him, on the basis of the allowances made by the Court of Claims to other attorneys for their services in the case.

Just one word, Mr. President, on the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is not this really the trouble about the $14,000: Mr. Gordon had the assistance of additional counsel besides those paid by the action of the Court of Claims, and they claim additional sums from him for their services that are not provided for? They claim that this $14,000, or most of it, should go to them, in addition to what went to the other lawyers? That is about the status of the matter, as I understand.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think that is not wholly correct, Mr. President. An action was brought, not by the principal attorney in the case, but by some other attorneys, against Mr. Gordon, and this $14,000 has been tied up.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think I made myself clear. My suggestion was this: Is it not true that lawyers not mentioned in the decision of the Court of Claims, and in addition to them, claimed that they had also done some work for Mr. Gordon in connection with the matter, and that out of his $14,000 he must pay them, and that it will take a large part of that sum to pay them?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is correct, Mr. President, as I understand.

Now, a word on the other subject:

The United States agreed to pay the Colville Indians for the cession of certain of their lands. The lands were ceded to the United States in consideration of that agreement. That agreement was, in effect, a treaty, and such a treaty as is referred to in the rules. The payment that is authorized by this bill is a payment of money that grew out of that treaty.

I do not understand that in appropriating to carry out the provisions of a treaty which requires us to pay certain sums of money we are going outside of the rule when we provide how that money shall be distributed. That is the only difference between a certain portion of this money being paid to counsel and the principal being paid to the Indians themselves that is not wholly in accord with the original agreement.

This question was brought up some years ago under a treaty in which it was attempted, by an amendment which I offered, to distribute in a certain manner the money which was to be paid pursuant to a treaty. A point of order was raised, similar to the point raised by the Senator from Kansas. The Chair held—Mr. Frye then being in the chair—that under the rule, after making an appropriation, the Senate could provide for its distribution in any manner it saw fit without such provision constituting new legislation, and that the only question there involved was whether the original appropriation of itself constituted new or independent legislation.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I want to say one word further in regard to the point of order.

The same point of order was made by the Senator from Kansas when this bill was before the Senate two years ago. It was then sustained by the Chair, the Vice President being in the chair at the time. I want to call attention to the ground upon which the ruling was made, to show that it does not apply to the present case.

The ruling made by the Vice President was that it was general legislation, because the amendment provided that the amount should be immediately available. The contention on the part of the friends of the amendment was that it was a payment of a fee due out of a particular fund which belonged to the parties from whom the fee was charged to be due, and that it was therefore strictly germane.

The Vice President conceded that, but here is his ruling. I will read first the remarks made by me and then the reply. The Vice President said:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BACON. I would beg permission of the Chair to make a suggestion in reference to a point of order previously ruled upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will be very glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. BACON. If this were a simple claim against the Indians for that much money, independent of this particular fund, I think the ruling of the Chair would certainly be correct; but this in a claim upon this particular fund and not a general claim against the Indians. This is what would be recognized in a court as a lien on a fund. It relates to the particular fund which is being appropriated. I think there is a distinction between that and an effort which might be made to collect some other debt against the Indians and asking that it be paid out of this fund.

Here is a fund which Congress is appropriating, and this is a part of the particular transaction which brings about this appropriation. Therefore I can not see how it can come under the terms of the rule. The object of the rule, which says that general legislation shall not be permitted, is that independent matter shall not be engrafted upon an appropriation bill. This is not an independent matter; it is a matter which directly relates to and is connected with the provision making the appropriation.

To that the Vice President made this reply:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point which the Chair made was that this is a bill providing appropriations for the Indian Department during a fiscal year. The amendment provides for another appropriation——

Mr. DAVIS interjected:

Distinct from this.

The Vice President continuing said:

For payment at a different time, which makes it a legislative provision in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. BACON. I presume it is because I am not entirely familiar with this Indian legislation that I do not understand the exact statement the Chair makes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Here is a provision which, under certain circumstances, might be considered purely as a limitation upon the appropriation being provided for, but the amendment makes provision that the appropriation shall be immediately available, which takes it out of the fiscal year for which we are making the appropriation.

Mr. BACON. I did not know of that, Mr. President, or I would have suggested to the author of the amendment that that ought to have been stricken out. That puts an entirely new phase on it. I did not know that that was in the mind of the Chair.

Now, Mr. President, that was the ground upon which the ruling was based, that when the amendment provided that the fund should be immediately available it took it out of that appropriation bill and provided for general legislation, making it a charge upon an altogether different appropriation bill.

Now, that is not in this amendment. Here is a particular fund, the balance of $100,000 coming to these Indians. It is in the nature, as I said upon that former occasion, of a lien upon that particular fund. It does not come out of the Treasury of the United States. It does not fall in any measure or in any manner within the spirit or purpose of the rule, which is to protect the Treasury of the United States against a particular appropriation being ingrafted upon a general appropriation bill, thus tending in its effect to take out of the Treasury of the United States money which has not been properly estimated for, and so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 20182) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. BACON. I think, Mr. President, that that clearly differentiates it, and the statement of the Vice President——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I am willing that the unfinished business shall be laid aside until the Senator finishes his remarks, if he desires. Otherwise I should like to go on with the unfinished business.

Mr. BACON. I have no desire to finish my remarks unless the matter is going to be acted upon. If the appropriation bill is going to be laid aside, I would prefer to wait until it is taken up again.

Mr. CLAPP. I think the better plan would be now to take up the tariff measure and vote on it and get it out of the way, and then the Senator from Georgia will have such time as he desires.

Mr. BACON. Very well; I am willing that that course should be pursued.

ADJOURNMENT TO FRIDAY.

Mr. NELSON. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on the 5th of July.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday, the 5th day of July.

The motion was agreed to.

THE CHEMICAL SCHEDULE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20182) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. SIMMONS and Mr. SMOOT suggested the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Crawford	Kenyon	Reed
Bacon	Cullom	Lea	Root
Bailey	Cummins	Lippitt	Shively
Bourne	Curtis	Lodge	Simmons
Bradley	Dillingham	Lorimer	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	du Pont	McCumber	Smith, Ga.
Briggs	Fall	Martin, Va.	Smith, Md.
Bristow	Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Smith, S. C.
Brown	Gallinger	Nelson	Smoot
Bryan	Gardner	Newlands	Thornton
Burnham	Gronna	Oliver	Tillman
Catron	Guggenheim	Overman	Townsend
Chamberlain	Heyburn	Page	Wetmore
Clapp	Johnson, Me.	Paynter	Works
Clark, Wyo.	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins
Clarke, Ark.	Jones	Rayner

Mr. THORNTON. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. FOSTER] on account of illness.

Mr. JONES. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is detained from the Chamber by reason of public business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. On page 3 it proposes to strike out lines 3 and 4, which read as follows:

Alizarin, natural or artificial, and dyes derived from alizarin or from anthracene, 10 per cent ad valorem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays were ordered and taken on the amendment, and no quorum appeared. The roll will be again called on agreeing to the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAILEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON], and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. BRANDEGEE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. I do not see him on the floor, and therefore I withhold my vote. I would vote "yea" if I were at liberty to vote.

Mr. BRIGGS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON]. I see that he is not present, and therefore I withhold my vote. I should vote "yea" if I were at liberty to vote.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. In the absence of that Senator I withhold my vote.

Mr. CRAWFORD (when his named was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. DU PONT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. As he is not in the Chamber, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. THORNTON (when Mr. FOSTER's name was called). I announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. FOSTER] an account of illness, and furthermore that he is paired with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I make this announcement for the day.

Mr. HEYBURN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senate from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. RAYNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. As stated by the Senator from Missouri, he is paired with that Senator. If the senior Senator from Michigan were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. In his absence I withhold my vote. Were he present I would vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT (when Mr. SUTHERLAND's name was called). My colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRIGGS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe that the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has not voted, and as I have a pair with him I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. GAMBLE] is unavoidably absent. He has a general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. ASHURST. I wish to state that the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] is unavoidably detained, and he is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN].

Mr. OLIVER. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. PENROSE] is temporarily detained from the session of the Senate. He is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM. I think I will take the liberty of voting. I vote "yea."

Mr. RAYNER. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 58, nays 0, as follows:

YEAS—58.

Ashurst	Cullom	Lippitt	Root

So Mr. SIMMONS's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. I offer the following amendment: On page 10, lines 9 and 10, I move to strike out the words "gum copal, one-half of 1 per cent per pound."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. On page 10, line 13, I move to strike out the words "gum kauri and damar."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. On page 10, line 16, I move to strike out the word "indigo."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. On page 12, line 25, I move to strike out the words "and soya-bean oil."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. On page 13, line 9, I move to strike out the words "Chinese-nut oil."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. On page 17, line 21, I move to strike out the word "twenty-five" and substitute in lieu thereof the word "fifteen."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 17, line 21, strike out the word "twenty-five" and in lieu insert "fifteen," so that if amended it will read:

Varnishes, including so-called gold size or japan, and enamel paints made with varnish, 15 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not agree to that amendment. It proposes to reduce the rate on varnishes, not only on plain varnishes but on gold size or japan varnishes and enamel paints made with varnish. The rate in the bill as passed by the House is 25 per cent, and now it is proposed that it shall be reduced to 15 per cent. I hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAILEY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON]. To avoid the trouble of repeating it I will ask that this announcement may stand for the day. I also desire to couple with the announcement the statement that if I were at liberty to vote I would vote generally with my party associates.

Mr. BRIGGS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and vote. I vote "nay." I make this announcement for the day of the transfer of my pair.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HEYBURN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANK-

HEAD]. In his absence I will withhold my vote. Were he present and were I permitted to vote I would vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I repeat the announcement of my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] and the transfer of that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. I will let this announcement of the transfer stand for the day. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON], and I therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea." I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM (after having voted in the affirmative). It may be possible that the Senator with whom I am paired may differ from me on this question, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. DU PONT (after having voted in the negative). As I observe that the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], with whom I have a general pair, is not present, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. McCUMBER (after having voted in the negative). I will ask if the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that that Senator has not voted.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have a general pair with him, and I will therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (after having voted in the affirmative). I wish to ask if the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] has voted upon this roll call?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that that Senator has not voted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I withdraw my vote, because I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RAYNER (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND].

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—29.

Ashurst	Gardner	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Bacon	Johnson, Me.	Paynter	Smith, Md.
Bristow	Johnston, Ala.	Poindexter	Swanson
Bryan	Kern	Pomerene	Thornton

So Mr. SIMMONS's amendment was rejected.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move, on page 10, line 10, to strike out the words "gum resin."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that the words "10 per centum ad valorem" should also be stricken out.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Chair is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, line 10, it is proposed to strike out the words "gum resin, 10 per centum ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. On page 8, line 6, I move to amend by striking out after the words "or condition by" the word "peeling."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. On page 22, line 14, I move to amend, after the words "or condition by," by striking out the word "peeling."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. On page 12, in line 19, after the word "soaps," I move to amend by striking out the words "containing castor oil, any of the foregoing in whatever form," and by inserting in lieu thereof the words "all of the foregoing made from or containing castor oil in whatever form, 20 per centum ad valorem," to be followed by a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. On page 21, line 19, I move to amend by inserting after the word "gray" the words "carbide of."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. On page 21, after paragraph 78, I move to amend by inserting a new paragraph, as follows:

Alizarin and indigo, natural or artificial, and dyes derived from alizarin or from anthracene.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. On page 22, line 2, I move to amend by inserting after the words "known as" and before the word "naphthalin" the words "anthracene and anthracene oil," to be followed by a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. On page 22, after paragraph 88, I move to amend by inserting as a new paragraph the following:

Gums, copal, kauri, damar, and resin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. On page 22, line 25, after the word "petroleum," I move to insert "soya-bean oil and Chinese nut oil."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have no further amendments to offer.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. SIMMONS. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRANDEGEE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. Not seeing him on the floor, I withhold my vote. I will make no further announcement of the pair during the day. I desire to say that if the Senator from New York were present and I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. In the absence of that Senator, I withhold my vote. If allowed to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CRAWFORD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS]. If he were present and I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DU PONT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. He is not in the Chamber, and I therefore withhold my vote. Were he present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CRAWFORD (when Mr. GAMBLE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. GAMBLE] is unavoidably absent. He has a general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. HEYBURN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. He is absent, and I therefore withhold my vote. If he were present and I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. He being absent, I am compelled to withhold my vote. Were I at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably absent from the Senate. He is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. If present, the senior Senator from Michigan would vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have already made a statement in reference to my pair, and will let that stand for the remainder of the day.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when Mr. WARREN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. WARREN] is unavoidably absent on business of the Senate. He is paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER]. If present and at liberty to vote, my colleague would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I observe that the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has not voted. As I have a general pair with him, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. RAYNER. I am paired with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. If he were present and I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have been requested to announce the pair existing between the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—27.

Ashurst	Johnson, Me.	Overman	Smith, Ariz.
Bacon	Johnston, Ala.	Paynter	Smith, Ga.

So the Senate refused to pass the bill.

COTTON FUTURES.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, during my absence, having been called away a week or two ago because of illness in my family, the bill (S. 4654) to regulate contracts for the future delivery of cotton, being Calendar No. 670, was placed under Rule IX. I ask unanimous consent that it be restored to the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, I shall object to that, on account of the wishes of the Senator from Mississippi, who had the bill placed on the calendar under Rule IX. I would rather not have it taken up in his absence.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It is not a question of taking up the bill. I merely ask unanimous consent that it be restored to the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. THORNTON. I object to anything being done with it in the absence of the Senator referred to.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then, Mr. President, I move that the bill be restored to its place on the calendar under Rule VIII. It is a bill introduced by me and favorably reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. During the time of my unavoidable absence the bill was taken from the calendar under Rule VIII and placed on the calendar under Rule IX. I move that it be restored to its place under Rule VIII.

The motion was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask the Senate to resume the consideration of House bill 20728, the Indian appropriation bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20728) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is, on page 68, line 18 to line 5, inclusive, on page 69. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] made the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to know whether the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] has completed his remarks on the point of order. I understood he had not done so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will permit the Chair, the Chair recalls the fact that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] offered an amendment to the paragraph. Does the Senator from Georgia desire to proceed now, or will he allow the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota to be acted on?

Mr. BACON. I am perfectly willing to have the amendment acted upon first.

Mr. LODGE. The point of order must be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order relates to the paragraph. This is an amendment to the text of the bill.

Mr. MCCUMBER. It was agreed that that should be the course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 68, line 25, it is proposed to strike out the word "forty-five," before the word "thousand," and in lieu thereof to insert the word "twenty-five," so that, if amended, it will read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of the sum of $1,500,000 set aside and held in the Treasury of the United States for the use and benefit of the Colville Indians under the provisions of an act approved June 21, 1906 (34 Stat. L., p. 337), the sum of $25,000 to Hugh H. Gordon for his individual services in behalf of said Indians, which sum of $25,000 is hereby appropriated for said Gordon's exclusive use and benefit out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the same shall be charged against the funds set aside for the benefit of said Indians.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, it seems to me the Senators who have argued the point of order have overlooked two things. In the first place, the amendment is not to a provision in the bill. It is a separate and distinct item. The amendment against which I made the point of order some two years ago was an amendment to an item in the bill. But it seems to me that whether that is true or not, the material point in this case is the fact that this amendment seeks to amend an act of Congress.

In 1906 this claim was before Congress. The Senate at that time placed an item in the Indian appropriation bill; and I desire to call the Chair's attention to that item, because this amendment repeals that act of Congress and sets aside the decision of the Court of Claims.

The item was as follows:

The act of June 21, 1906, supra, in addition to setting aside the $1,500,000 for the use and benefit of the Colville Indians, contained the further provision that "jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment in the name of Butler & Vale (Marion Butler and Josiah M. Vale), attorneys and counselors at law, of the city of Washington, D. C., for the amount of compensation which shall be paid to the attorneys who have performed services as counsel on behalf of said Indians in the prosecution of the claim of said Indians for payment for said land, and in determining the amount of compensation for such services the court may consider all contracts or agreements heretofore entered into by said Indians with attorneys who have represented them in the prosecution of said claim, and also all services rendered by said attorneys for said Indians in the matter of said claim * * *; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay the sum of money so awarded by said court to the said attorneys (Butler & Vale) upon the rendition of final judgment, out of the said sum herein set apart or appropriated for the benefit of said Indians, and payment of said judgment shall be in full compensation to all attorneys who have rendered services to said Indians in the matter of their said claim, the same to be apportioned among said attorneys by said Butler & Vale as agreed among themselves: Provided, That before any money is paid to any attorney having an agreement with Butler & Vale as to the distribution of said fees, each of the same shall execute and deliver to the Secretary of the Interior a satisfaction and discharge of all claims and demands for services rendered said Indians in the matter of their said claim."

In accordance with this provision of law a petition was filed in the Court of Claims, the case being docketed as No. 29526, Butler & Vale (Marion Butler and Josiah M. Vale) v. The United States and the Indians residing on the Colville Reservation. A decision was rendered by the court on May 25, 1908 (43 C. C., 497), and a decree entered in favor of claimants in the aggregate sum of $60,000, apportioned as follows:

Benjamin Miller, administrator of the estate of Levi Maish, deceased, $6,000.
Hugh H. Gordon, $14,000.
Marion Butler, $20,000.

Daniel B. Henderson, $5,000.
Herbert J. May, $3,000.
Frederick C. Robertson, $2,000.

The Court of Claims construed the act of June 21, 1906, supra, as limiting the court to a judgment on the basis of a quantum meruit. Booth, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"In view of the facts and circumstances surrounding the enactment of the jurisdiction statute here questioned, we can not hold otherwise than that Congress intended to reward claimants, if entitled to reward, upon the basis of a quantum meruit."

This amendment repeals that act of Congress. It sets aside that decision of the Court of Claims. It is clearly general legislation, attempted to be placed upon the Indian appropriation bill. It seems to me that the bare statement of the fact that it does repeal this former act of Congress, and that that must of necessity be done in order to give these people any money whatever, is sufficient to make it subject to the point of order. It is general legislation, because it repeals a general act of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does any other Senator desire to be heard on the point of order? Upon carefully examining the proposed amendment, the Chair finds in it nothing that is apparently deserving of consideration, except the fact that it is a private claim. The question, in the mind of the Chair, is whether or not, under the rules of the Senate, a private claim of this nature may be placed upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, as I did not have anything to say on that point, I should like to say one word in that connection, if I may do so without intruding too far upon the time of the Senate or of the Chair.

The rule that has been invoked refers to private claims against the Government. This is not a claim against the Government. Here is a fund that belongs to the Indians, and it is the last of the fund. It is a fund which has been recovered under the contract for which this fee is claimed. It seems to me the rule with reference to a private claim has no application whatever so far as it would bar this item from the right to be put upon an appropriation bill. It has no relation to a claim against the Government.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, I will say just one word. This is a claim against a specific fund. When that fund is once paid out this claim never can be thereafter enforced against it. It is not like a claim against the Government, which, if denied in one place, may be asserted and maintained and recovered in another. It is here or nowhere. It is about to be paid out. The money is already in the Treasury to the credit of these Indians.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want to call the Chair's attention to the fact—probably it has been already brought to its attention—that exactly the same question was passed upon on March 23, 1904.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not yet concluded its statement, but will be glad to hear from any Senator who wishes to enlighten the Chair.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will call attention to the particular point of order then made:

The Indian appropriation bill being under consideration, on page 53, after line 9, the committee reported the following amendment:

"For payment to J. Hale Sypher, to be paid out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Choctaw Nation, $50,000, which said sum the Secretary is hereby authorized and directed to pay immediately to J. Hale Sypher upon execution by him of a receipt in full of all claims against the Choctaw Nation for his services and expenses as attorney of said nation under contract entered into on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1891, between said J. Hale Sypher and the said Choctaw Nation.

Mr. Kean raised a point of order that it was a private claim and not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. Frye). The Chair calls the attention of the Senate to the item on page 53 of this bill, beginning in line 10 and ending with line 19, for payment to J. Hale Sypher of $50,000. The point of order was made by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Kean]. The Chair is of opinion that the private claim, under Rule XVI barred from appropriation bills, must necessarily be a claim against the Government of the United States which would take money from the United States Treasury. This item is not such a claim. It is neither against the Government nor does it take Government money from the Treasury. In the opinion of the Chair the committee having full jurisdiction of the subject had a right to report this item favorably and thus make it in order. So the Chair overrules the point of order raised by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. CURTIS. But, Mr. President, that item in the appropriation bill thus passed upon did not attempt to repeal a former act of Congress, nor did it attempt to set aside a finding of the Court of Claims. That is what this amendment does.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was about to remark when interrupted that it is of opinion that this is not general legislation. The Chair would agree with the Vice President in the ruling he made when the point of order was made against this identical claim—that it became general legislation only for the reason that the words "to be immediately available" were inserted in the amendment.

The Chair is familiar with the ruling of the late Senator Frye, which has been read by the Senator from North Dakota, and has likewise observed that as long ago as February 13, 1855, in the Thirty-third Congress, this identical question arose in the Senate and was ruled upon. It arose on an amendment providing for the payment to Richard W. Thompson, as attorney for the Menominee Indians, of an amount for services, in conformity with a memorial of said Indians. Mr. Badger, in the chair, decided it in order because it was not a claim against the Government, but payable from the annuities of the Indians, although a private claim.

Mr. CURTIS. But, Mr. President, does the Chair hold that we can, on an Indian appropriation bill, or any other, repeal a general act of Congress, and that an amendment of that kind will be in order if a point is made? Does the Chair hold that Congress can set aside the judgment of a court without the item becoming general legislation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not think the amendment repeals an act of Congress, and does not take that matter into consideration at all. The Chair is of opinion that it is competent for the Senate to pass upon the validity of this claim upon precisely the ground that was determined by the late President pro tempore of the Senate, Mr. Frye, and by Mr. Badger as long ago as in the Thirty-third Congress. The Chair is inclined to overrule the point of order, but will be glad to have it further discussed.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I desire to hear from the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], who has knowledge of the history of this claim, as to the reasons which take it beyond the rule established by the precedents which have been read before the Senate. My understanding is that this whole matter was once before under discussion in this body, and the Congress of the United States solved the difficulty then presented by referring the whole matter to the Court of Claims for adjudication, both as to the liability and the extent thereof. The Court of Claims found in behalf of the claimants for $63,000. That sum was accepted by the claimants, including this particular claimant.

Mr. OVERMAN. When the appropriation of the money was made they received it in full, and it was provided that they should receive that much in full of all claims and demands.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That being the case, it seems to me the entire proceeding was novated into that judgment, and that precluded and estopped everybody who attempted to assert any right under that transaction. It seems to me it then required an affirmative act of Congress to create a liability when the court and the action of the parties themselves decided that no liability existed and that nobody ought to pay any more on account of that particular transaction.

If that is the case—and I understand from the Senator from North Carolina that while rather an imperfect statement of it, it is not an incorrect one so far as it goes—it would not be a claim to be dealt with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the Chair did not understand that particular fact in this case.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I was sure the Chair did not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It had not been stated to the Chair.

Mr. OVERMAN. The recollection of the Senator from Kansas fully agrees with mine about that. I very well remember the debate upon this claim on the floor of the Senate some four or five years ago. It was then understood that we would leave to the Court of Claims the question as to what amount should be allowed upon the idea of the quantum meruit. The court allowed some $63,000. Then, of course, there had to be an appropriation to pay the $63,000. As I understand, in conference it was provided that this $63,000 should be paid, provided it was accepted in full of all claims and demands. They did so receive it, and $14,000 was allowed to this claimant. Now he comes here and asks for $45,000 more. If it is granted, what is to hinder any other attorney engaged there from coming to Congress hereafter and asking for forty or fifty or a hundred thousand dollars more, on the ground that the Court of Claims erred, after he had agreed to go into the Court of Claims and have the amount allowed upon a quantum meruit?

This matter has been here three times before, has been voted down by the Senate, and now it comes up here again. This money is in the Treasury. I remember it was said that the Senator from North Dakota wanted to leave $93,000 there, the disposition of it to be determined hereafter. But why is this money left there when we provided for the disposition of this fund some two years ago?

I sympathize with Mr. Gordon because this $14,000 is in litigation. It is true that it is not a claim against the Government. But the Government is the guardian of these poor Indians, and they are its wards, and I think they ought to be treated just like anybody else.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I think—and I say it with all due respect—that the Chair misapprehended the point of order. I observed—and I am not saying it by way of criticism—that while the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] was reading from the document to which he referred, the Chair was reading from the bill. I think if the Chair had heard what the Senator from Kansas read on that point it would have made a different ruling on the point of order. I therefore ask that the Senator from Kansas will again read what he read before.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before that is done, the Chair will venture to ask the Senator from North Carolina whether this claimant accepted a sum of money and receipted for it?

Mr. OVERMAN. No, Mr. President. I understand that the $14,000 mentioned has been in litigation. An injunction has been issued, and there is litigation over that money right now. That was his part of the award.

Mr. CURTIS. The litigation has held up the payment of the amount.

Mr. OVERMAN. The court said he was entitled to the $14,000, but the injunction held up its payment, and other lawyers are suing for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will be glad to hear from the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I made the point of order that this was general legislation, because of this decision of the court, as I stated.

Mr. NELSON. I wish the Senator would again read what he read just now.

Mr. CURTIS. I intend to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before the Senator does that, the Chair will state that it is familiar with the ruling the Vice President made on this claim. Was the point the Senator is now going to urge urged at that time?

Mr. CURTIS. The point urged by me at that time was that it was general legislation; but this argument was not made, because, as I understand—I have not looked at the RECORD—the Chair ruled upon the point that the money was made immediately available. I do not recall whether I made this point and read this decision at that time or not; but my recollection is that the matter went off on the other point.

If the Senate will bear with me, this is the part I read a while ago:

The act of June 21, 1906, supra, in addition to setting aside the $1,500,000 for the use and benefit of the Colville Indians, contained the further provision that "jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment in the name of Butler & Vale (Marion Butler and Josiah M. Vale), attorneys and counselors at law, of the city of Washington, D. C., for the amount of compensation which shall be paid to the attorneys who have performed services as counsel on behalf of said Indians in the prosecution of the claim of said Indians for payment for said land, and in determining the amount of compensation for such services the court may consider all contracts or agreements heretofore entered into by said Indians with attorneys who have represented them in the prosecution of said claim, and also all services rendered by said attorneys for said Indians in the matter of said claim * * *"; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay the sum of money so awarded by said court to the said attorneys (Butler and Vale) upon the rendition of final judgment, out of the said sum herein set apart or appropriated for the benefit of said Indians, and payment of said judgment shall be in full compensation to all attorneys who have rendered services to said Indians in the matter of their said claim, the same to be apportioned among said attorneys by said Butler and Vale as agreed among themselves: Provided, That before any money is paid to any attorney having an agreement with Butler and Vale as to the distribution of said fees, each of the same shall execute and deliver to the Secretary of the Interior a satisfaction and discharge of all claims and demands for services rendered said Indians in the matter of their said claim."

In accordance with this provision of law a petition was filed in the Court of Claims, the case being docketed as No. 29526, Butler & Vale (Marion Butler and Josiah M. Vale) v. the United States and the Indians residing on the Colville Reservation. A decision was rendered by the court on May 25, 1908 (43 C. C., 497), and a decree entered in favor of claimants in the aggregate sum of $60,000, apportioned as follows:

Benjamin Miller, administrator of the estate of Levi Maish, deceased, $6,000.

Hugh H. Gordon, $14,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is that the Hugh H. Gordon mentioned in this bill?

Mr. CURTIS. The same claimant.

Marion Butler, $20,000.
Josiah M. Vale, $10,000.
Daniel B. Henderson, $5,000.
Herbert J. May, $3,000.
Frederick C. Robertson, $2,000.

The Court of Claims construed the act of June 21, 1906, supra, as limiting the court to a judgment on the basis of a quantum meruit. Booth, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"In view of the facts and circumstances surrounding the enactment of the jurisdiction statute here questioned, we can not hold otherwise than that Congress intended to reward claimants, if entitled to reward, upon the basis of a quantum meruit."

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Kansas is mixing up the merits of this case with the parliamentary question whether or not it is proper to be considered upon an appropriation bill.

The very first question that naturally arises in this case is whether or not, there being $1,500,000 to the credit of these Indians, the Congress had a right to say that any portion of it should be applied for attorneys' fees. The moment we admit that Congress had the right to distribute it in a certain way, the moment we admit that Congress had a right to say that the court should advise Congress—because that is all it means—as to what fee ought to obtain in this case, that moment we concede the right of Congress to go over the subject in an appropriation bill.

Suppose the court had said $60,000, as it did, and Congress had appropriated only $30,000 or $40,000, or suppose Congress at that time had said "We will not take the advice of the court as conclusive and we will appropriate $65,000 instead of $60,000." Is there any question of the power of Congress to do that?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I will yield the floor in just a moment. If Congress had the power to determine what portion of the appropriation should be applied for a certain purpose at one session of Congress, it would have a right to increase or diminish that at another session of Congress. So, after all, it seems to me that it is not a question of new legislation, a question of abolishing other laws, but it is a question as to whether Congress will grant so many thousand dollars in addition to what it has heretofore appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. LODGE. Congress, as I understand it, made no appropriation. It simply directed a payment from a fund.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the same thing.

Mr. LODGE. Not at all. The law did not provide that the court should advise Congress as to what they were to appropriate. The law distinctly says "and payment of said judgment shall be in full satisfaction of all attorneys." The judgment was to fix the amount.

Mr. President, I do not care to take the time of the Senate in discussing the point of order. I do not agree with the original decision of Mr. Frye in the Sypher case, and I never did; but I think this comes under an entirely different head. If it is not general legislation to reverse the previous action of Congress and to reverse the decision of a court, it is difficult for me to understand what general legislation is.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I hesitated about entering upon a discussion involving the merits of the question, and I carefully avoided that in what I had to say before to the Senate. But the matter has been presented in such a way that it seems to me a recitation of the facts in this case is somewhat essential, if the point of order is to be broadened to the extent now indicated. With the permission of the Senate, I will occupy a few minutes just to state what this case is, and I hope I may have the attention of the Senate, especially of Senators who seem to be indisposed to recognize the propriety of this claim.

Congress passed upon the question as to whether or not it was indebted to these Indians, the Colville Indians, on account of the opening of a reservation, the contention being that while the reservation should be opened the Indians did not have a claim to it, and that while the lands would be sold no compensation would be given to the Indians. That contention was made by one of the most honored and careful Senators in this body, and one in whom the Senate had as much confidence as it ever had in any other Senator in this body—one who was particularly familiar with Indian affairs, Mr. Orville H. Platt. He contended that the Government of the United States was under no obligation to pay these Indians one dollar, and the act which was passed opening the lands to settlement and practically taking them away from the Indians did not carry with it any appropriation; and while I can not recall that it did so in words, it did in effect deny that there was anything to be paid to these Indians.

In that condition of affairs Mr. Gordon made a contract with these Indians that he would endeavor to secure for them compensation from the United States Government. The Indians entered into a contract with him in writing by which they agreed that they would pay to him and to his associate who was with him in the contract—I mention the name of only Mr. Gordon for brevity—15 per cent of all that might be gotten from the United States Government in payment for these lands in the State of Washington. That contract was brought by him to the Interior Department for its approval. An examination of the contract was made by the then Secretary of the Interior, my present colleague [Mr. SMITH], and he cut the fee down from 15 per cent to 10 per cent and approved it upon those terms. It was a solemn contract in writing that upon the recovery which should be had from the United States Government under the claim which he would prosecute for them he should be paid the amount of 10 per cent. The Indians, of course, were perfectly satisfied with that contract. The contract had in it an additional provision that it should run for the term of 10 years.

That contract was prosecuted with the utmost industry by Mr. Gordon and by those whom he employed to assist him. The work was done and the end practically and almost certainly assured before the expiration of the limitation of 10 years prescribed in the contract. I do not make that statement in a general way simply from hearsay, but I make it as a fact found by the Court of Claims.

It so happened that after Gordon's contract had expired by limitation, and after the work had already been done, other parties sought to make a contract with these Indians, and probably did have some form of contract with them. When the case was before the Court of Claims this second body of lawyers tried to establish a claim against this fund on the ground that they had rendered certain services after the expiration of the 10 years. The Court of Claims denied to them any compensation whatever upon the express ground that all the work had been done before the 10 years had expired, and that therefore the parties who came in afterwards were not entitled to anything. They were denied the right to any compensation upon the ground that Gordon and those who had done the work under Gordon's contract had done all the work, and that these parties therefore were not entitled to anything.

I mention that simply as conclusive evidence of the fact that while technically the contract of Gordon was limited to 10 years, and he might not be held to be entitled to anything under the contract after that time, it is a fact judicially ascertained that he had performed all the work before that, that the result was due exclusively to his work, and that therefore those who came in and claimed for services subsequently rendered were not entitled to anything. When I speak of Gordon I speak of him and those whom he employed to work under him.

Gordon employed some other lawyers, principally a firm by the name of Butler & Vale. Gordon himself, after having spent a number of years in looking after it, left it largely to those whom he employed, and he is certainly entitled to the benefit of whatever resulted from the work of those whom he employed. There was never any other living human being who had a contract with these Indians except Gordon and the man who was associated with him and Butler & Vale. No other lawyer ever had any contract with these Indians. The contract was with Gordon alone and the lawyer who was associated with him, and all the work performed by other lawyers was under an employment by Gordon that they should assist him in the work.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. OVERMAN. My recollection of this matter is——

Mr. BACON. I would prefer that the Senator would allow me to conclude my statement of the question.

Mr. OVERMAN. I speak of the contract. This contract——

Mr. BACON. The Senator goes ahead.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia declines to yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. The amendment was made six years ago in a conference committee and had never been considered in either House. The fight came on when the report of the conference committee was presented.

Mr. BACON. I object to the Senator's interruption of my narration with an argument.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am speaking of the contract.

Mr. BACON. I would prefer to go on.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am stating facts.

Mr. BACON. The Senator is doing it without my permission.

Mr. OVERMAN. I beg pardon. I thought I had the Senator's permission.

Mr. BACON. I endeavored in as courteous a way as I could to suggest to my honored friend that I should be permitted to complete my narration before he entered upon an argument.

Mr. OVERMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BACON. I am now narrating the history of the case. While the matter was under consideration before Congress as to whether or not these Indians should be paid anything for this property, which was afterwards recognized by Congress as being worth $1,500,000, when it was afterwards denied that they were entitled to one cent of it, and when Gordon and his partner with him in the contract was endeavoring to secure for them that for which they had no evidence of indebtedness whatever, the Spanish War came on and Gordon went off into the Army. After a service of some time the matter was still pending here in Congress and the active charge of it really went out of his hands. It was in the hands of those whom he had employed, not in the hands of associate counsel employed by the Indians, because nobody else had been employed by the Indians. Gordon and his partner in the contract were the sole parties to any contract with the Indians, and these other parties were simply his employees. He himself having interests in the far South, living, practically, in Florida, although he was from my State, and having property interests there, and the matter dragging slowly along, the lawyers whom he had employed living here in Washington, he naturally left it to them. Everything which they did in the prosecution of that case was as much his act as if he had himself been present. After the term expired these same lawyers continuing to prosecute the claim, although the contract by its limitation of 10 years had expired, the appropriation was finally secured, after long-continued and most earnest effort, with a claim utterly denied and disputed as having any validity by such a man as Orville H. Platt.

Finally Congress was brought to a recognition of the fact that these Indians were entitled to be paid, and Congress proceeded to arrange to pay them $1,500,000 for this property which it had gotten, for which it had refused originally to pay a cent, and which it had finally been induced to recognize. Congress agreed to pay $1,500,000 exclusively through the efforts of Gordon and those whom he employed to represent him.

When the question of the distribution of that fund came up in Congress and the claim was made for $150,000, which was the contract of the Indians which had materialized to their great benefit in securing $1,500,000 for them out of the repudiated claim, the contention was as to whether or not these lawyers should have the money. Gordon was not here; he was leaving it to the parties whom he not only understood but knew to be his employed attorneys to represent him in all these matters. I recollect well the debate in the Senate. Under the act which the Senator from Kansas has read, instead of paying $150,000, which was the plain letter of the contract, and which nobody was disputing was justly due and was a reasonable fee for a claim which had been utterly repudiated and denied by the Government after a long contention here, in which there were a great many personalities, which my friend from North Carolina will recall, in a part of which he was a little prominent himself, as there seemed to be some matters which related to distinguished gentlemen from his own State, it was finally so ordered that the act was passed directing the Court of Claims to pass upon it as a quantum meruit, but the act recited that in passing upon it as a quantum meruit these contracts should be taken into consideration, or rather that they should take cognizance of them.

Mr. Gordon was not here. He was not a party consenting to that in any way. He was not present at the time of the adjudication by the court. He has never consented to receive $14,000 in full payment. He has never received a cent of it, and he has never made any signature agreeing that he should be limited to $14,000. It can not be produced; it does not exist; it never has existed. Yet it is said that under those circumstances a point of order can be raised.

Mr. President, how does that repeal any law? Here is a fund in court, as it were. It is not a court, but it is likened to that. Here is a claim upon this particular fund. Where else can this claim be asserted? It is not as in the case of a claim against the Government where, when a point of order is made upon an amendment proposing to put it upon a bill and that point of order is sustained, the party can go and bring it up in the next session of Congress or propose it in another bill. When this money is once paid to these Indians it is gone, and gone for good. It is really a question as to what is due in justice and in equity.

This matter originated 20 years ago, and 10 or 15 of the best years of this man's life have been passed hanging around this Capitol; first, in the effort to secure justice for these Indians, and next, in the effort to get a poor pittance for himself in compensation for his work. He has grown old and gray in the effort.

Mr. President, if this were a case where we were seeking to secure a payment for some alleged service where no particular fund was the fruit of that service, it would be a bad enough case if it were meritorious, but in a case where the fund is the fruit of that service and where that fund is a great and a valuable fund, and where not a dollar of it would have been gotten but for the work of this man and those whom he has employed, where these Indians are the recipients of a great sum of money once repudiated by the Government, not repudiated in a careless, thoughtless way, but repudiated after careful consideration and upon the judgment of such a man as Orville H. Platt, then to say, Mr. President, that we would be untrue to our wards if we required that out of that fund a reasonable pittance should be paid for this service, because it is a pittance compared with the original amount, can, in my opinion, find no justification.

Mr. President, I repeat the statement I made in the earlier part of what I have had to say, or possibly on the subject of the point of order originally, that this man has not received one dollar, and, practically, unless this amount is allotted him, he will not receive a dollar. Butler & Vale employed other men to represent them. Other men got mixed up in it. When this unfortunate claimant sought to get the small pittance of $14,000 out of the $150,000 which was the original contract, with suits innumerable and injunction after injunction, this pittance has been tied up in the court and denied him. As fast as one case would be decided in his favor another would be instituted. It has been little short of blackmail, sir. If the $14,000 ultimately comes to him, every dollar of it will practically have been consumed in his expenses in trying to get some little return for the great work which he accomplished through himself and those whom he employed in securing $1,500,000 for these Indians.

Mr. President, that is not all. He not only secured that, but this particular contention in regard to the payment of this money, while it related particularly to the northern half of the property of the Colville Indians, settled the principle which controlled the money which they have received for the southern half. If the figures which I have understood to be correct are true, these Indians have not only received a million and a half dollars for the northern half, but over a million and a half dollars for the southern half, controlled by the same principle, amounting altogether to nearly $4,000,000, every dollar of which has been paid over to them but $100,000, which is still in the Treasury. When that is gone not another dollar is available for the payment of this money, the payment of this fee. It is the fruit of this work. It is the remnant, the small remnant, of the fruit of this work, without which work not one dollar would have ever gone to these Indians.

Mr. President, I do not see how any man can hesitate in the opinion that this amount should be paid. The Senator from North Dakota has offered an amendment which reduces it to $25,000. I will say very frankly that I am glad he offered the amendment, not because I have any doubt of Mr. Gordon's being entitled to the $45,000, because I have none whatever. It is better that he shall have that than nothing at all. Even then it would be far less in the aggregate than the $150,000 which these Indians themselves agreed in writing under the approval of the Secretary of the Interior to pay.

Mr. President, in what possible way can it be contended that it is subject to a point of order? There may be reasons which will be sufficiently influential with the Senate upon the merits of the question to cause Senators to say that the money shall not be paid, but it does seem to me that there is nothing here which should subject it to a point of order. The bill in no manner sets aside any former legislation. It in no manner sets aside the adjudication of the court. It is an independent question whether or not this fund shall be subjected to the payment of this pittance to this man or whether after 20 years of work, first in behalf of the Indians themselves and then in the effort to secure scant justice for himself, he shall be turned out for all time, forever and for aye, without a dollar, when there has been this great result from his labors to be enjoyed by others, and when it is only proposed that out of that rich fruit of his labors this small pittance shall be paid to him after this long delay.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. I want to ask——

Mr. LODGE. I beg pardon; I thought the Senator had finished.

Mr. BACON. I want to add something which I recall. I have here the letter of the Department of the Interior addressed to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], signed by the former Secretary of the Interior, which I ask may be read as a part of my remarks. It shows the absolute justice of this claim and the propriety of its payment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, May 2, 1910.

Hon. MOSES E. CLAPP,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt, by your reference of March 3, 1910, of a copy of an amendment intended to be proposed by Senator Clay to H. R. 19028, the Indian appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1911, which has since become a law, it having been approved on April 4, 1910, without the proposed amendment being included.

It was proposed to insert in the last paragraph of section 23 (sec. 25 of the act as approved), relating to the Colville Reservation, after the words "provided by law," the following:

"Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to set aside from said annual installment the sum of $90,000 and pay said sum to Hugh H. Gordon, attorney for said Indians, for services rendered in the prosecution of their claim for the payment for lands ceded to the United States."

The paragraph which it was intended to amend appropriates the sum of $300,000 for the fourth of five installments to the Indians of the Colville Reservation for the cession of land opened to settlement by the act of July 1, 1892 (27 Stat. L., 62), being a part of the full sum of $1,500,000 set aside in the Treasury in payment for said land under the terms of the act of June 21, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 325, 377).
